to allow of its being floated on the surface, with a person in it, for a considerable time. In Dalmellington are a public and a private library, and a reading-room well furnished with standard works, periodicals, and newspapers; a sum has been left in trust for the support of the latter and the private library, and for the education of a certain number of children. The parish, which is ten miles in length by about three in breadth, belongs principally to the Honourable Colonel F. Macadam Cathcart, of Berbeth, and his lady. Fairs are held in March, May, and December.

DALRY

IS a small town, in the parish of its name, and district of Cunningham; 69 miles w. by s. of Edinburgh, 25 s.w. of Glasgow, 16½ s.s.w. of Paisley, 5 s.w. of Beith, 4 n. of Kilwinning, and 7 n. by E. of Saltcoats; pleasantly situate on a rising ground, surrounded by the rivers Caaf, Rye, and Garnock, which run in different directions so near the village, as to give it, when the streams are swelled with rain, the appearance of an island. The branches of manufacture existing in the town and parish are those of cotton and carpet yarn, and silk and harness weaving, in which many of both sexes are employed; while a considerable number of females are occupied in sewing and embroidering, usually denominated 'Ayrshire needlework,' for the Glasgow and Paisley manufacturers. The dressing and spinning of flax is likewise carried on to some extent, and lime and coal abound in the neighbourhood. At the beginning of the last century, Dalry village contained only about six dwellings, and a population not exceeding 100; at present, there are about 1,000 inhabitants, and the town consists of five streets, three of which diverge from a centre forming a small square; many of the houses are well built, and the shops are neat. There are several public houses for the accommodation of travellers, and two which belong to the grade of Inns; the one called the 'Crown' is the principal. The town is lighted with gas, by a company formed in 1834. There are three public libraries in the parish, viz., the 'Dalry Library,' the 'Dalry Church Library,' and the 'United Secession Library.'

At Loan-brig is a remarkably fine spring of water; and from a situation near the church is seen, to the west, a beautiful natural cascade, which has a curious and extraordinary appearance during the continuance of frost. At Auchenkiech, on the estate of Blair, two miles from Dalry, is a cave, evidently the work of nature, and well deserving the examination of visitors to this district: it is about 183 feet in length, and from 5 to 12 in height; the roof is encrusted with petrefactions, and over the entrance projects a vast rock, 30 feet by 27; its interior resembles Gothic arched work; near the middle it expands into a spacious chamber, 35 feet long by 12 broad, and 12 feet in height: in former times popular superstition peopled it with elves—it accordingly received the appellation of 'elf-house;' in later days, under the arbitrary and treacherous reign of Charles II., it afforded a refuge to the covenanters of this parish from the violence of their infuriated persecutors. In Dalry parish also is 'Camp-hill,' where the Scottish army is said to have encamped previous to the battle of Largs, in 1263. Dalry bestows the title of baron upon the eldest son of the Earl of Glasgow. The weekly market is held on Thursday, and there are fairs in January, May, and July.

DALRYMPLE

Is a small village, in the parish of its name, and district of Kyle; 76 miles from Edinburgh, six from Ayr, five from Maybole, and four from Kirkmichael; pleasantly situate on the banks of the Doon. The parish, which is about eight miles at its extreme length, and three in breadth, occupies some beautiful undulating and flat land, mostly arable. In the upper portion of the parish is a coal mine, and in some other parts lime abounds. The principal land proprietors are the Marquess of Ailsa, R. A. Oswald, Esq., the Hon. Mrs. Leslie Cumming, and Andrew Hunter, Esq. The name Dalrymple is said to be derived from Dalrymole, signifying 'the dale on which the king was slain;' and it is supposed that Coilus, a king of the Britons, was killed in battle at this place: its Gaelic name, however, was Dail-a-Chruim-Puill, or 'dale of the crooked pool.' Near the Roman road, which intersects the parish, was found, in a moss, a vessel of Roman bronze, by antiquarians conjectured to be of that kind used by the priests in their sacrificial oblations; and in 1834 was discovered, near the same spot, an ancient vase: both these relics are in the possession of the Rev. Mr. Wallace, the minister of the parish and master of a highly respectable boarding-school. In this parish are three British fortlets on commanding sites, and the ruins of three castles: these, with the beautiful loch of Marthanham, the waters of which are covered annually with the yellow and white water-lily, are objects of considerable interest and curiosity with the visiter to this district.

Is a parish in the district of Cunningham, about nine miles in length by six in breadth. At a former period the district was a fen or moss, and hence it is supposed to have acquired its name; but it has undergone most material improvement, and the greater proportion of the parish is now under cultivation. The Kirktown of Fenwick is cheerfully situate on the banks of the Mahernock stream, and on the road from Glasgow to Kilmarnock—18 miles s.w. of the former, and about three n. by e. of the latter town. There is another village, sometimes called Rose-Fenwick, on the same road, about a quarter of a mile south from the Kirktown. Guthrie, a noted champion of the covenant before and after the restoration, was the minister of this parish; he was a celebrated and very eccentric preacher, distinguished by the title of 'the Fool of Fenwick,' an appellation which even appeared on the title-pages of his published sermons. The places of worship are a church of the establishment, and one for a united secession congregation. The principal landowners are the Dowager Marchioness of Hastings, the Earl of Glasgow, and William H. Crawford, Esq. Cattle fairs are held on the first Wednesday in May, and the first Tuesday in November.

GALSTON

IS a considerable village, or rather town, in the parish of its name, and district of Kyle-Stewart, eligibly situate on the left bank of the Irvine, on the road from Edinburgh to Ayr, and from Dumfries to Glasgow; it is 22 miles from the latter city, 16 N.E. of Ayr, and five from Kilmarnock; seated in a hollow, sheltered on all sides by rising grounds. The principal employment of the labouring class is weaving; there is a manufactory for muslins, another for linens, and three for bonnets. The stream of the river, which is crossed by a stone bridge of three arches, gives motion to two corn-mills, another for preparing flax, and one for making paper; besides these various means of employment, another occupation is found in raising coals, of which a considerable quantity is obtained from estates of the Duke of Portland, who is superior of the parish. A court is held in Galston, on the last Thursday monthly, for the recovery of small debts, and the administration of justice in affairs of minor importance. Here are no fewer than five benefit societies, a bible and missionary association, two Sabbath evening schools, wherein 200 children receive the advantages of instruction, and a subscription library.

The parish extends about thirteen miles in length, by from four to five in breadth; lying in the upper part of the county, contiguous to Lanarkshire; and separated by the Irvine from the parish of Loudon on the north, Sorn bounding it on the south. The surface is diversified with hills, but the land is generally arable, and there is a considerable quantity of wood. The district is watered by some small tributaries of the Irvine, and the river Avon, which rises in the upper part of the parish. About a mile from the town is London castle, a large and magnificent structure, in the modern castellated style: this, together with the old castles of Cessnock and Bar, surrounded as they are by natural and artificial woods, highly enhance the beauty of this district—in which is also Paties' Mill, celebrated in the delightful song called 'The Lass of Paties' Mill.' The annual fairs are on the third Thursday in April, the first Thursday in June, and about the first of December.

IS a post town and burgh of barony, in the parish of its name and district of Carrick; 99 miles w.s.w. of Edinburgh, 56 s.s.w. of Glasgow, 31 n.n.w. of Portpatrick, the like distance n.n.e. of Stranraer, 21 s. by w. of Ayr, 13 n. by e. of Ballantrae, 12 s.s.w. of Maybole, and 6 s. w. of Dailly; situate on the left bank of the Garvan or Girvan, near to its influx with the sea, and at a point exactly opposite the islet called Ailsa Craig. The harbour, which is now convenient for shipping, underwent great improvement at the expense of the late Sir H. D. Hamilton, the then sole proprietor; and others, upon an extensive scale, are contemplated, in consequence of, and to give convenience and effect to, the new line of railroad, and the establishment of a steam-packet direct to Glasgow. Large quantities of grain, of various kinds, are annually exported from hence, chiefly to Liverpool and Glasgow. The consignments of timber from North America to merchants in this town are considerable; the trade in coal and lime is likewise important—the mines of the former and quarries of the latter being numerous in this neighbourhood; but the principal business of the town consists in the manufacture of a variety of cotton and other goods, for the Glasgow and Paisley markets, which affords employment to the bulk of the inhabitants. The government of the town is vested in two bailies and twelve common councilmen—four of the latter being chosen annually, upon the retirement or otherwise of the like number, on the 12th October; the Dutchess de Coigny, or her representative, is superior of the burough. The places of worship are, a church of the establishment (a neat structure, thoroughly repaired some years since), united secession and methodist meeting-houses, and a Roman catholic chapel. To the parochial school a valuable donation was made by the late Mrs. Crawford, of Ardmillan, who left the interest of £1,000, for ever to the teachers, for the education of forty children, subject only to the deduction of two guineas, to be distributed in small prizes amongst the pupils; the same munificent lady also left the interest of £1,000, of which £12. are given to the precentor of the church for the instruction of ten of the children in sacred music, and the balance to be divided among poor householders, not receiving parish relief. Here is also a charity school, supported by various donations and subscriptions from the gentry and others residing in the town and neighbourhood. A market, chiefly for grain, is held at Girvan every Monday; and there are two annual fairs, on the last Monday in the months of April and October, for stock, hiring servants, and general business.

The celebrated and extraordinary rock called AILSA CRAIG is immediately opposite to, and 15 miles distant from Girvan, rising out of the Frith of Clyde to the height of a thousand feet. It is two miles in circumference; and the top, which is conical, is covered with a luxuriant crop of heath, grass, and other plants, which feed great numbers of goats and rabbits. In one place the nettles form an impenetrable forest, six feet in height; and all the other plants likewise attain a proportionably gigantic size. All around, on the precipitous sides of the rock, uniformly nestle almost inconceivable numbers of solan geese, puffins, and gannets, which flutter about, and produce an incessant deafening noise. On a long terrace or shoulder of the Craig, at the elevation of 200 feet from the base, stands a deserted square tower, or castellated house, still very perfect as a ruin. Higher up issue two sparkling and beautiful springs of water, one of which forms a small marshy plain, covered with various plants, amongst others the hydrocotyle vulgaris, of extraordinary magnitude. The rock belongs to the Marquess of Ailsa, who draws from it a yearly rental of about £30, which is paid by the feathers of the fowls and the rabbit skins. Naturalists and botanists would find a visit of value, in increasing their knowledge of the vegetable world.

IRVINE

Is a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, a seaport, and the capital of the parish of its name; 67 miles w.s.w. of Edinburgh, 25 s.s.w. of Glasgow, 11 N. of Ayr, the like distance s. of Beith, and between 6 and 7-w. of Kilmarnock: it is in the district of Cunningham—agreeably placed on rising ground, on the north bank of the river Irvine, about a mile from its junction with the sea. The situation of the town is dry and airy, a broad street running from south-east to north-west the whole length of it. On the southern side of the river, but connected to the town by a bridge (the widest and handsomest in the county), there is a row of houses on each side of the road leading to the harbour; these are built on a uniform plan, and are mostly inhabited by seafaring people: a number of houses of a similar description appears on the road leading to Ayr. None of these suburbs are within the royalty, but are located in the parish of Dundonald. At the centre of the burgh is the town-house, which bears a striking resemblance to that of Annan. Irvine is a town of considerable antiquity, as appears from the records of the burgh, Alexander II having granted a charter to the burghesses, confirming some prior royal grants; from another similar document it is apparent that the burghesses were in possession of the entire barony of Cunningham and Largs. The burgh is governed by a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and 12 councillors; and unites with Ayr, and with Campbelltown, Inverary and Oban, in Argyleshire, in returning one member to parliament: the present representative is Lord James Stuart, and the number of constituents at the last election was 249. A baillie court is held every Monday, and one for the recovery of small debts on every alternate Monday.

The trade of the port consists principally of the export of coals; and the imports are iron, timber, slates, limestone, and grain. The number of vessels belonging to Irvine is 106—tonnage, 11,545. In the coasting trade, according to the latest returns, there were vessels entered inward, 3,792—tonnage, 256,087; vessels outward, 3,711—tonnage, 250,877. Of foreign vessels, inward, there were 63—tonnage, 4,795; outward, 89—tonnage, 6,314. There are mills belonging to the burgh, which in point of architecture, and machinery, are unequalled in the county. A great number of females are employed in hand-sewing—one house, by an agent, having paid for the last eight years upwards of £8,000. per annum. A considerable manufactory for anchors and chain-cables, a shipbuilding yard and roperies, are the other principal branches of the trade of this seat of industry.

The church, which is a handsome stone building, with a spire and a clock, stands on a rising ground betwixt the town and the river, and is an ornament to the place; it commands extensive views of the Frith of Clyde, and of the stupendous mountains of the Isle of Arran. There are four other places of worship, all of them neat structures. At the north end of the town an academy was erected, in 1814, at an expense of £2,250, of which sum the burgh gave £1,633, and the remainder was supplied by public subscription; in this institution, which is an embellishment and honour to Irvine, are three teachers, by whom are taught, on very moderate terms, Latin, Greek, Hebrew, French, English, the mathematics, writing, arithmetic, &c. Besides a variety of private seminaries, there is a free-school, also maintained by public spirit and pecuniary aid, which instructs about 120 pupils; the master receives a yearly salary of £50. There are likewise numerous Sabbath-schools, several friendly societies, and a savings' bank. The news-room here is furnished with London, Edinburgh, and many of the Scotch provincial papers; an extensive subscription library, also, affords a fund of literary amusement and information to its numerous members; and there is an excellent circulating library in the High-street, conducted by Mr. Dick. Races take place annually in Eglintoun park, which continue six days, on and after the third Monday in August. The weekly market is held on Saturday; and the fairs on the first Wednesday in January, the first Tuesday in May, and the third Wednesday in August.

POST OFFICE, High-street, John Dean, Post Master.—The KILMARNOCK, EDINBURGH, GLASGOW, and IRISH Mails arrive every morning at a quarter before seven, and the ENGLISH Mail arrives every evening at half-past six; and they are despatched every evening at half-past five and nine.

KILBIRNIE,

Kilbirny, is a thriving and populous village, in the parish of its name, and district of Cunningham; 64 miles w. by s. of Edinburgh, 20 s.s.w. of Glasgow, the like distance n. of Ayr, and three from Beith; eligibly situate on the banks of the Garnock, in the heart of a fine country, and within a mile of the Loch of Kilbirny, which extends two miles in length by half a mile in breadth, and is well stored with perch, trout and eel. The importance of this village has been much augmented of late years, by the establishment of two very extensive mills—one for the spinning of flax, belonging to Messrs. Wilson and Jamesons, the other for the manufacture of cotton goods by power, belonging to Mr. David Watson: there is also a manufactory for thread. The old castle of Glengarnock is perhaps one of the most ancient, as well as most stately ruins in Ayrshire: it is supposed to have been the residence of the once famed family of De Morville, which flourished in great splendour during the reigns of Alexander I, David I, Malcolm IV, and William the Lion; they held the high office of constable of Scotland, and were lords of Galloway and Cunningham. There likewise exists the extensive ruin of the old house of Kilbirnie, long the residence of the ancient family of Crawford of Kilbirnie. Some time after the death of George, the last Earl of Crawford, a person came from Ireland, calling himself John Lindsay Crawford, and assuming to be the heir male to the title and estates: this claim excited a great sensation in the country for several years; but the pretender being convicted of vitiating written evidence, in support of his assumption, was transported to Botany Bay for seven years. Upon his return, however, he renewed his demands, and a society of noblemen and gentlemen in London assisted him; but, after a minute and careful investigation, the claim was decided to be unfounded, and was consequently abandoned. This individual having since died, his heirs, not satisfied with the judicial decision which had been pronounced, are still pertinaciously litigating their claim to the property.

KILMARNOCK,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF RICcartON AND KILMAURS.

KILMARNOCK is a large and important manufacturing town, in the parish of its name, and in the district of Cunningham; 65½ miles s.w. of Edinburgh through Glasgow, from the latter city 21½ s.s.w., 12 n. from Ayr, and between 6 and 7 E. from Irvine; situate on level ground, near the confluence of the Kilmarnock water with the Irvine. Two centuries ago, this now thriving and populous town was a mere hamlet, dependent upon the baronial castle in its neighbourhood. The advantages of the place, as a site for manufactures, were the presence of coal, healthiness of situation, a populous country around, and abundance of provisions: for many years and generations, however, it seems to have been distinguished only for the production of the broad flat bonnets, so long the characteristic wear of the Scottish lowland peasantry, as also the striped cowls which yet bear the name of the town. As this business increased, the population augmented; and in the year 1731 the number had swelled so much, that the parish church was found inadequate for its accommodation, and a new one was erected. Subsequently, and for a considerable period, the staple manufacture was that of carpets, and in this branch it yet stands pre-eminent: in 1832 the ascertained product of this article amounted to £150,000; it is made of every possible kind and texture, from the plainest to the richest colour and fabric: a few years since the Brussels carpet was successfully imitated; and lately a variety, termed the three-plies, of extreme beauty and durability, has been introduced. An extensive trade is carried on in the manufacture of shoes for exportation—likewise in that of leather, for the tanning and dressing of which there are several highly respectable and large establishments. There are four very extensive nursery-grounds, two breweries, and the like number of rope-walks; iron-founding and machine-making are important branches; and there are numerous well-furnished and handsome shops, in the various occupations usually found in large and populous towns. One particular description of productive industry and skill seems, however, of late years, to have outstripped all those before mentioned—namely, the making and printing of shawls: for, in the year 1832, the amazing number of 1,128,814 of this denomination of garment issued from the manufactories of this place, amounting in value to upwards of £200,000; and the demand since that year has greatly increased. The trade and commerce of Kilmarnock are assisted by branches of the 'Ayr Bank,' of the 'Ayrshire Banking Company,' and of the 'Commercial Bank of Scotland.' About half a mile north-west of the town is an extensive coal-field, from which fuel is obtained for the works of Kilmarnock, besides large supplies transmitted continually by railway to Troon, where they are shipped for various places. There are five incorporated trades, namely, the bonnet-makers, skiners, tailors, shoe-makers, and weavers; the first-named is the most ancient—it was incorporated in 1646.

The aspect of the town is agreeable, especially in its central part, where the streets are regularly laid out, and the greater portion of the houses are of freestone; it has of late considerably extended to the south and east, and in these directions has now many elegant edifices. The improvements of Kilmarnock are under trustees, nominated by act of parliament in 1802; these are, the provost and magistrates for the time being, his Grace the Duke of Portland, and several gentlemen also interested in improving the town; this trust is expected soon to be wound up. The town-house, built in 1805, contains a court-room for the magistracy, and public offices, besides a prison for criminals. In 1814 a superb and commodious news-room was erected in the centre of the town, serving the double purpose of a reading-room and a place of general resort. The gas-works were constructed in 1823, at an expense of from £5,000, to £6,000, defrayed by means of shares of £10. each, which, to the credit of the inhabitants, were taken up in the course of a few weeks; the works are under the management of twelve gentlemen, and a sub-committee of four. Kilmarnock possesses an excellent academy, in which various branches of education are taught by able masters; there are, besides, several private seminaries of a high character, and many schools that impart instruction to children of the poorer classes. The institutions likewise comprise some well-conducted societies, amongst which are the procurators' and the merchants', a philosophical institution, an excellent subscription library, with numerous benefit clubs and associations. A very fine observatory, with valuable machinery and telescopes of a superior description, has been constructed by the inventive genius of Mr.

Thomas Morton, of this town, a self-instructed mechanist, who also originated many important improvements in the process of carpet-weaving. The civil government is vested in a provost, four bailies, and eleven councillors; the magistrates preside in their civil and criminal courts by turns, and the justices sit once a fortnight in what is called the small debts court. This town joins with Dumbarton, Port Glasgow, Renfrew, and Rutherglen, in returning one member to parliament.

Kilmarnock consists of two parishes—the High and the Low—each containing an established church. In the latter parish there has been lately erected, in addition, a large and handsome edifice, connected with the establishment, possessing accommodation for 1,700 persons: the style of architecture is that which prevailed in England during the latter part of the fourteenth century; it is ornamented with an admirable Gothic tower, and cost £5,000; Messrs. Howie and Brown, of this town, were the builders. Near to the church, in King-street, is a very neatly-designed relief church, of recent erection, with an elegant spire; there are likewise two burgher chapels, one Cameronian, and one independent, with several other places of worship for different sects. The most remarkable object in this vicinity is the ruin of Dean castle—an ancient, extensive, and well defended mansion, formerly the property of the Earls of Kilmarnock; it stands in a ‘dean,’ or hollow, less than a mile north from the town; it was burnt down in 1735, from the carelessness of a servant girl, who in preparing some lint for spinning heedlessly let it catch fire. Kilmarnock House, another edifice once belonging to, and the last residence of, that noble family, is also in the parish: from this house proceeded the last unfortunate earl, in 1745, to join the standard of rebellion, which cost him his head. The Dutchess of Portland and the Marchioness of Hastings (Countess of Loudon) are the principal proprietors of this conjoined parish. The markets, which are held on Tuesday and Friday, are abundantly supplied with every necessary article of domestic consumption; a market for grain has also been established of late years, and promises to become of considerable utility. The fairs are held in February (‘Fastens-even’), first Tuesday in May, third Wednesday in July (commonly called ‘the gooseberry fair’), and the third Wednesday in October—the last three are old style.

The parish of RICCARTON is in the district of Kyle, lying on the left or south bank of the Irvine river, which separates it from Kilmarnock. The village stands on an eminence, a mile to the south of that town, on the right bank; but is almost connected with Kilmarnock by a long street. The parish extends about six miles in length, by between two and three in breadth. The village is remarkable for having been the residence of the venerable Sir Ronald Crawford, the maternal uncle of Wallace, with whom, it is said, the hero sometimes sojourned; and it was to Riccarton that he generally retired after performing any of his very daring exploits, before he openly unfurled his country's banner. On revenging the treacherous murder of his uncle and other chieftains, by burning the barns of Ayr, he took his way by night to this village, accompanied by a few followers; when he reached a certain eminence, about six miles from Ayr, he turned round, and, seeing the flames still ascending, exclaimed with stern exultation, ‘the barns burn well!’ From this laconic expression (tradition adds) the spot obtained the name of ‘Burn-well,’ which it still retains. The church at Riccarton is a modern structure, having been erected in 1823; it has a fine steeple, and from its elevated position has an ornamental effect upon the country all around. A new bridge across the Irvine is now in progress, which will materially improve the approach from the Ayr road to Kilmarnock. A considerable quantity of coal is raised in this parish; the Duke of Portland is the principal landed proprietor.

KILMAURS, a small town, a burgh of barony, and capital of the parish of its name, in the district of Cunningham, two miles from Kilmarnock, is situate on the right bank of a rivulet, called Kilmaur's water, or ‘Carmel water;’ it was erected into a burgh of barony by James V, at the instance of Cuthbert, Earl of Glencairn, and his son, Lord Kilmaurs. The government of the town is vested in two bailies (chosen annually by the portioners), before whom debts may be recovered. Kilmaurs is composed principally of one street, in the middle of which is a small town-house with a steeple and clock. Formerly this place was somewhat noted for the manufacture of claspknives, or ‘whittles’—the sharpness of the edge of which instruments gave rise in Ayrshire to a peculiar expression of comparison: a man of acute understanding, and quickness of action, is said to be ‘as sharp as a Kilmaurs whittle.’ The most prominent trades now are those of shoemaking and weaving, for the Glasgow and Paisley markets. Coals are raised in the parish, the surface of which consists of large level fields, interspersed with gentle declivities and elevations; the summits of the latter are well wooded, and the whole district has a pleasing appearance. There is an old pile of building near to the church, seemingly of very ancient origin; but with respect to its founder, or the date or object of its erection, even tradition itself is silent. In the cemetery of the Glencairn family, adjacent to the church, is a piece of beautiful sculpture, a specimen of the taste and execution of former times, erected as a monument to the memory of the chancellor, William, the ninth earl. The market, which was for many years held on the Friday, has fallen into disuse; but fairs are holden on the 11th of June, 11th of November, and the first Wednesday in August—all old style.

KILWINNING

Is an ancient and thriving little manufacturing town, in the parish of its name, and district of Cunningham; 24 miles from Glasgow, 3 N.W. of Irvine, 4 N.E. of Saltcoats, the like distance S. of Dalry, 10 N.W. of Kilmarnock, and 5 from Ardrossan; situate on rising ground, about two miles from the sea; stretching westward from the right bank of the Garnock, and approached through long umbrageous paths, skirted by beautiful fields. It consists chiefly of one street and some by-lanes, with a few rows of modern houses. The weaving and manufacture of gauzes, muslins, shawls, &c., are carried on, to an important extent, for the Glasgow and Paisley markets, to which they are conveyed by the local agents. The agricultural produce of the parish is likewise considerable; and coals, which are obtained in abundance, are conveyed by a railway passing from east to west across the parish. The only remarkable objects are, the picturesque ruins of the ancient abbey, founded by Hugh de Morville in 1140; and the beautiful tower of a church, to which its style of architecture bears no resemblance; its tower cost, exclusive of the old materials, the sum of £2,000, raised by subscription, and to which the late Earl of Eglintoun was a liberal contributor. The present Earl has a fine mansion in this neighbourhood, called Eglintoun Castle. Kilwinning was the first place in Scotland where free masonry was established; it is said to have been introduced by the foreign architect who was employed in erecting the monastery here. Besides the distinction acquired from its ancient masonic lodge, it is also remarkable for being the seat of a company of archers, ascertained to have existed so early as the year 1488; and the society at the present day is most respectable. Fairs are held on the 1st of February, new style; and on the first Wednesday after the 19th of October, old style.

KIRKMICHAEL AND CROSS-HILL.

KIRKMICHAEL is a village, in the parish of its name, and district of Carrick; 76 miles from Edinburgh, 22 from Kilmarnock, 14 from Girvan, 10 S. of Ayr, the like distance E. of Dalmellington, 8 N. by E. of Dailly, 4 from Straiton, and 3½ from Maybole; pleasantly situate in a valley, on the road from Newton-Stewart to Glasgow—36 miles from the former, and 44 from the latter. The general surface of this parish is hilly—towards the south and east, mountainous and rocky; but the whole is more or less cultivated. Its extent is nine miles in length, by four in breadth; the proprietorship is pretty equally divided between the Marquess of Ailsa, Col. Shaw Kennedy, Sir James Ferguson, Sir David Hunter Blair, and Mr. Ritchie. It possesses some good lime-quarries. The Girvan runs through it, the Doon is its boundary for several miles, and the Dyrnock water flows through the village, which latter derives its name from a church that formerly stood here, dedicated to St. Michael: the present religious structure, which is neat and commodious, was built in 1787, on its site. In the church-yard is the tomb of Gilbert M'Adam, who was shot, in 1685, by the Laird of Colzean and Ballockmyle, for his adherence to the covenanters. Two Sunday-schools are in the parish; one in Kirkmichael—the other in the small village of CROSS-HILL, about two miles hence. Fairs are held on the third Thursday in February, the third Thursday in April, the third Friday in August, the second Thursday in September, and the first Thursday in November.

POST OFFICE, KIRKMICHAEL, James Wilson, Post Master.—Letters arrive from MAYBOLE (per penny-post) every morning at eight, and are despatched every afternoon at five.

KIRKOSWALD

IS a small and picturesque old village, in the parish of its name, and district of Carrick; 13 miles s. from Ayr, and 4½ from Maybole; situate on a line of road from Portpatrick to Glasgow—90 miles from the former, and 48 (by the new road) from the latter town. The parish is highly interesting, as containing within its limits several objects of great attraction for the stranger and tourist. The sea-coast presents a sandy beach, with a beautiful rich sward to the very sea-mark; and there are two lakes, from whence flow many small streams which wander through the district towards the sea. Of late years there have been raised various delightful plantations, particularly near the shore around Culzean Castle, the splendid seat of the Marquess of Ailsa. The mansion, which is a fine specimen of ancient architecture, is placed on a rock overhanging the sea; and on the land side are delicious gardens, with a noble park of great extent. Not far from the castle is a fort mounted with thirteen guns, and a mortar battery, both kept in the most effective order. The surrounding scenery, combining all in wood, water and field that can form a glowing and varied landscape, may here be contemplated with both mental and optical transport. In a low valley, between Kirkoswald and Maybole, are the remains of the abbey of Crossraguell, founded by Duncan, first Earl of Carrick, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary: at one period it was possessed by Cluniac monks from Paisley; at the reformation it became the property of the Earl of Cassilis, in whose family it still remains: dilapidated as it now is, this abbey is the most entire in the west of Scotland. From the coast-road between Girvan and Maybole may be seen the ruins of Turnberry castle, once the residence and property of Robert Bruce. Within view of this memorial of former centuries, and not more than a mile from it, lies the farm of Shanter, once the residence of Douglas Graham, the immortalised hero of Burns's poem, 'Tam-o'-Shanter'; though that honour is disputed, by some, in favour of another farmer, called Thomas Reid.

LARGS AND FAIRLIE.

LARGS is a neat town and sea-bathing place, in the parish of its name; 73 miles w. by s. from Edinburgh, 30 s.w. from Glasgow, 14 s. from Greenock, and 20 n. from Irvine; beautifully situate on the Frith of Clyde, in the northern extremity of the county, in a remarkably healthy and well-sheltered district. It is now one of the most favourite retreats on the west coast for ruralising and bathing, the communication with Glasgow, and other large towns on this side of the country, being rendered convenient and expeditious by means of steau-boats: during the season it is enlivened by the presence of a great number of visitors; and the general accommodation afforded by the abundance and superior style of the lodging-houses, together with the agreeable manners of the residents, fully entitles it to the extensive patronage it enjoys.

An elegant suite of baths was erected by public subscription in 1816, some of them after the model of those at Seafield, Leith; and there is one vapour bath. Attached to these are a reading-room and a library, supplied with numerous papers weekly, and every popular work as soon as published. Considerable business is carried on in the fishery; and (formerly the fair held on St. Colm's-day was a scene of bustle and active traffic—it was attended by the people from the highlands, who used to resort hither to exchange their produce for that of the lowland trader.

The parish church is a handsome structure of stone, with a spire and clock, and is a great ornament to the town. There are several benevolent societies, and two Sabbath-schools, which form the principal charitable institutions. Three circulating libraries afford literary amusement to domestic readers, and a company of comedians generally attends during the summer. Few districts possess more romantic scenery: the old castles of Kilmory, Shelmurly, Knock, and Fairley, with Brisbane House, ornament this parish.

POST OFFICE, Main-street, LARGS, William M'Call, Post Master.—The LONDON Mail arrives every evening at seven, and is despatched every morning at seven.—The GLASGOW and GREENOCK Mails arrive every morning at half-past nine, and are despatched every afternoon at half-past four.—The WEST KILBRIDE Mail arrives every afternoon at a quarter past four, and is despatched every morning at ten.

It was on the plain of Largs that the celebrated battle was fought between the Scots and the Danes, in their last invasion of this country, in 1263. The glen, near Kelburn—the cascade, which has a fall of 50 feet perpendicular—and various other natural beauties, irresistibly arrest the attention and excite the admiration of the traveller. Fairs are held on the first Tuesday in June (which lasts three days), old style; the first Wednesday in February, third Wednesday in July, and fourth Wednesday in October.

FAIRLIE, or Fairlie, is a small village in the parish of Largs, about two miles south from that town. In the vicinity is Kelburne castle, the picturesque seat and family mansion of the Earl of Glasgow; likewise the ancient square tower of Fairlie castle, formerly a seat of a family of that name. The extensive plantations around Kelburne castle are highly ornamental to the general landscape. There are, besides, some very elegant villas, which harmonize with and adorn the prevalent features of the parish; and the marine scenery is truly beautiful and enlivening.

MAYBOLE AND THE VILLAGE OF CULROY.

MAYBOLE is a small, neat, market and post town, the capital of the parish of its name and of the district of Carrick; 87 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 52 n. from Portpatrick, 44 s.s.w. from Glasgow, 25 n. from Balafrnac, 22 s. from Kilmarnock, 12 n. by E. from Girvan, and between 8 and 9 s. from Ayr; situate in a most delightful part of the country, on the face of a gentle eminence with a southern exposure, and surrounded by lovely scenery, formed of parks, highly cultivated, and hill and dale, with a sea-view of the 'busy Frith of Clyde' opening on the west. Maybole was created a free burgh of barony 14th November, 1516, on a grant to Gilbert Earl of Cassilis, the patron, and to the provost and prebendaries of the collegiate church of Maybole, to which belonged the lands whereon the town stands. In October, 1639, an act, ordaining the head court of Carrick to be held at Maybole, was passed by the Lords of the Articles. The streets of the town are narrow, and contain no eminently fine places or public buildings; but it nevertheless possesses, in a certain degree, a character of massive magnificence seldom seen in much larger places; this is attributable to the circumstance of its having been in former times the winter residence of many of the noble and baronial families of the neighbourhood, some of whose mansions yet standing, with their turrets, impart an air of antique dignity to the houses around: several of the dwellings now inhabited by weavers bear a venerable aspect, and doubtless were at a distant period the domiciles of more dignified personages. The mansion-house or castle of the Cassilis family is the finest surviving specimen of the winter seats formerly existing in Maybole: it is a stately well-built structure, situate at the east end of the town, and is said to have been the residence of the repudiated Countess of Cassilis. The building now used as the town-hall belonged to the Kennedys of Blairquhar. The principal business carried on here is weaving for the Glasgow houses, in which branch there are many local agents employed, and many families indefatigably occupied.

The collegiate church has been for some time in ruins, and the ground appropriated as a private cemetery for the Cassilis family. A church of the national establishment, and one of the seceders or burghers, comprised the religious edifices until the 28th June, 1824, when the first stone of a methodist chapel was laid; the church of England service, however, is performed in the subscription school once a month. The parochial school dispenses instruction to about 170 boys and girls, who are taught all the useful and some of the polite branches of literature. Yearly and quarterly meetings of the 'Carrick farmers' society' are held in the town-hall; the annual one is on the first Thursday of August, and the quarterly on the first Thursday in the months of February, May, and November; the quarterly in August merges in the yearly assemblage. A 'Knox' club was instituted in 1824, for the purpose of commemorating the zealous exertions of that extraordinary man. In the vicinity are many interesting objects, among which is the celebrated ruin called Crossreguel (noticed in the sketch of Kirkoswald); Killenzie castle, now in a similar state of dilapidation, once belonging to a branch of the Cassilis family, who were for a long period hereditary bailies of Carrick; and the remains of Greenan castle half a mile from the town. Ancient coins have been frequently found, and a vast quantity was some years ago discovered, in fine preservation, in this district. In the neighbourhood are two remarkably fine springs of water, popularly named 'St. Cuthbert's' and 'Well-trees'; the latter is said to yield ten thousand imperial gallons per hour. The market is held on Thursday, and there are the following annual fairs: Candelmas fair, the second Thursday of February; Beltan fair, the second Tuesday of May; Lammas fair, the second Tuesday of August; and Halloa fair, the second Tuesday of November.

CULROY is a small village in the parish of Maybole, three miles and a half from that town, on the road to Ayr, from which it is five miles and a half distant.

MUIRKIRK

Is a thriving and considerable village, the capital of the parish of its name, in the district of Kyle; 50 miles w.s.w. from Edinburgh, 30 s. from Glasgow, 26 E. by N. from Ayr, 24 s.e. from Kilmarnock, and 16 N.W. from Sanquhar; situate near the right bank of the water of Ayr, at the junction of the roads leading from Glasgow to Dumfries, and from Edinburgh to Ayr; and in a district rude and bleak, the land being but partially reclaimed from its original mossy and moorish character; another considerable portion is, however, profitably employed in grazing and pasture, and in 1835 the black-faced sheep fed in this parish carried the Highland Society's prize. Though nature has not here been bountiful to the farmer, or encouraged the labours of the agriculturist, she has been abundantly kind to the miner, for coal, iron and limestone are liberally dispensed throughout the territory. At the 'Muirkirk Iron Company's' works are three blast furnaces, constantly in operation, for the manufacture of pig iron; the malleable description is also produced here, both in a rolled and hammered state. There are, besides, extensive tile and lime works, belonging to the Duke of Portland, who, with Lord Douglas and the Hon. Colonel Cathcart, are the principal proprietors of the land in this parish. Its length is nine miles, by an average breadth of about six; bounded on the north-east by Douglas, on the east by Kirkcounel, on the south by Cumnock, and on the west by London. In the village are two libraries, which are well conducted, and the like number of good Inns—the 'Black Bull' and the 'Masons' Arms.' Fairs are held in the months of July, August, and December.

NEW CUMNOCK

Is a village and parish in the district of Kyle, 43 miles s. of Glasgow, 21 s.e. of Kilmarnock, the like distance w. by S. of Ayr, 10 E. by N. of Dalmellington, 12 w. of Sanquhar, 24 n.w. of Thornhill, and 5 s.e. of Cumnock. The parish, which lies on the eastern boundary of that of Cumnock (or Old Cumnock) is in general hilly, and affords excellent pasture for sheep; but there are many spots of rich arable land. The river Nith takes its rise in the south-west end of the parish, and runs through the centre of the whole; and there are several small lakes, the sources of the Lagar and Afton. Various mines of coal are worked in this neighbourhood, the property of the Marquess of Bute; G. S. Menteath, Esq., and Miss Stewart.

Black lead is also procured here, of a quality suitable for pencils; and lime abounds in different parts of the district. A new church was erected in 1833—a neat and well-adapted building, sufficiently capacious for a congregation of a thousand persons; there are likewise a dissenting meeting-house and a parochial school. A subscription library was established in 1828; it contains upwards of six hundred volumes. A few years since a new road was formed, four miles in length, up the glen of Afton; by continuing the line six miles farther, a communication would be effected between this part of Ayrshire and the adjoining county of Galloway, which would shorten the present distance by twelve miles, all carriages being now obliged to take the circuitous route of Dalmellington. The traces of an old castle, the fosse and ditch of which alone remain, are observable in this neighbourhood. An annual cattle-fair is held in the village on the Thursday immediately previous to Whitsuntide; but it has no weekly market.

NEWMILNS AND DARVEL.

NEWMILNS is a neat market and manufacturing town, and burgh of barony, in the parish of Loudoun and district of Cunningham; 24 miles s. of Glasgow, 18 N.E. of Ayr, 7 E. by s. of Kilmarnock, and 16 N. of Cumnock; situate on the bank of the river Irvine, about two miles E. from the village of Galston. It was made a burgh of barony by King James IV, in 1490; and the charter was confirmed by Sir Matthew Campbell, of Loudoun, in 1566. The bailies are competent to hold courts, from which there is no appeal, except to the court of session; and in other respects their jurisdiction is as ample as that of most royal burghs. The weaving of muslins is carried on here extensively, one thousand hands being employed in this branch of manufacture. The places of worship are an established church, and a meeting-house of the united secession body. The parochial school, and a Sabbath evening school, are both well attended; in the latter, about three hundred children of the working classes receive instruction. The Marquess of Hastings, having married the heiress of Loudoun, is the superior of the burgh; Thomas Brown, Esq., of Waterhaughs, also has considerable property, and is superior of a village adjoining, called Greenholm. The market is well supplied with the necessary articles of consumption. There are four annual fairs, namely, the first Thursday in February, the third Wednesday in May, the fourth Thursday in August, and the fourth Wednesday in October.

DARVEL is a small village, in the same parish as Newmilns. In this neighbourhood is Loudoun castle, the seat of the Marquess of Hastings, a mansion of modern erection and great elegance, in the castellated style of architecture, situate amidst some fine grounds near the Irvine river: the woods and braes of Loudoun furnish a theme for one of Tannahill's best songs. The Marchioness of Hastings munificently erected a school in this village, which is still maintained by the family.

OCHILTREE.

IS a small but pleasant village, in the parish of its name and district of Kyle; 64 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 49 n.w. from Dumfries, 37 s. from Glasgow, 28 n. from Girvan, 22 n.w. from Saughar, 16 s. from Kilmarnock, the like distance n.e. from Maybole, 11  $\frac{1}{2}$  E. from Ayre, and 4 from Cumnock; situate on the south side of the Lunar water, and on the high road from Ayre to Dumfries and Edinburgh. The country around is delightfully picturesque; and the face of the parish, which is pretty level, with some agreeable undulations, is well watered. The weaving of cotton goods for the Glasgow market gives employment to several hands; the making of snuff boxes, to a limited extent, is carried on here; and there is a considerable manufactory for shearing-hooks. The great Scottish reformer, John Knox, married his second wife at this village; she was the daughter of Lord Ochiltree, who at that period resided at Ochiltree house, now the mansion of the Dowager Lady Boswell. The church, like most others in this part of the county, is a plain building, and the only place of worship. The parochial school is well attended. There is a subscription library, which was established in 1836. There are no magistrates, and the village is almost proverbial for the honest character of its inhabitants. Ochiltree formerly gave a baron's title to a branch of the family of Stewart. Fairs are held on the second Wednesday in May and the first Tuesday in November, for cattle.

SALTCOATS AND STEVENSTON.

SALTCOATS is a sea-port, partly in the parish of Stevenston and partly in that of Ardrossan; 74 miles w.s.w. from Edinburgh, 30 s.w. from Glasgow, 19 n. from Ayre, 14 w. by n. from Kilmarnock, and one from Ardrossan: eligibly situate on the Frith of Clyde, near to its northern extremity. The general appearance of this town is far from prepossessing, but its situation and proximity to Ardrossan, the arrival and departure of the trading vessels, and the passing and repassing of the different steam-packets and railway carriages, all contribute to give life to this ancient place; a spirit of improvement is becoming manifest with the inhabitants; and the town, it is expected, will be lighted with gas before this work is published. About 170 years ago, Salt-cots (then so called) consisted only of a small number of cots or cottages, the inhabitants of which obtained a livelihood by making salt in kettles; but at the beginning of the last century, a harbour being constructed for the convenience of shipments of coal, the produce of the mines in this neighbourhood, the little hamlet began to assume the semblance of a village; it is but in recent years, however, that it has risen to any note. During the late war this place possessed an extensive trade, and ship-building was carried on with great spirit; but since the peace its commerce has been much reduced, and is now nearly confined to the importation of timber, and the exportation of coals to Ireland, in which trade there are sometimes about forty vessels employed. The manufacture of salt here is considerable, and a great number of looms are employed in the weaving of muslins, &c. for the Glasgow and Paisley markets. A branch of the Irvine custom-house transacts the revenue business, and the proprietors of the Ayrshire bank have a branch here; the house in which the business of the latter is transacted, and which is also the residence of the manager, Mr. W. B. Orr, is a very handsome building, and an ornament to Raie-st, in which it stands. Both at the east and west of the town are extensive chymical works, belonging to Messrs. Burns and Son, who manufacture magnesia and Epsom salts. The principal Inns are the 'Saracen's Head,' in Harbour-street, and the 'King's Arms,' in Bradshaw-street, the former a good posting-house. The town-house, the foundation of which was laid in 1825, consists of a spacious hall, with two smaller apartments adjoining, and a lock-up for prisoners: the edifice, which is surmounted by a steeple, is a prominent and effective object when approaching the town. A justice court, for the recovery of small debts, sits in this town once a month.

The places of worship are a church of the establishment, two others for the secessional body, one for the relief synod, a Gaelic church, and a baptist meeting-house. The children of the town have the advantage of free, parochial, and Sabbath schools, and of a library of religious and moral works. There are several benefit societies, which alleviate the sufferings and relieve the necessities of the poor; and one of those establishments that must ever aid the impulse of industry and prudence—a savings' bank. An annual fair is held on the last Thursday in May.

STEVENSTON is a village in the parish of its name, and district of Cunningham—situate one mile north-east from Saltcoats, and two south-west from Kilwinning. It consists chiefly of one street, half a mile in length; and derives its name from Stephen, or Steeven, the son of Richard, who obtained a grant of lands from Richard Morville, constable of Scotland; the latter, then a very celebrated man, died in 1189; under this grant Steeven settled here, and gave his patronimic designation to the place. The parish abounds with coal and freestone, of which large quantities are annually shipped. The dairy and agricultural produce, comprising cheese, butter, wheat, oats, and potatoes, is likewise of considerable value. A great portion of the inhabitants of the village are employed in weaving, and through the agents here the works of their looms are conveyed to the Glasgow houses. The present church is a neat and handsome building, of modern erection. The old church belonged formerly to the monks of Kilwinning. Yearly fairs are held on the second Friday in August and the 31st of October.

STEWARTON, DUNLOP AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

STEWARTON is a prosperous manufacturing town, in the parish of its name and district of Cunningham; 16 miles s. by w. from Glasgow, 8 n. from Irvine, 5 n. from Kilmarnock, and 3 from Fenwick; situate in a pleasant part of the county, on the bank of the water of Annock. The parish, which is about ten miles in length, and varying from three to four in breadth, is a rich agricultural district, highly cultivated and improved, and adorned by several gentlemen's tastefully laid out seats. For centuries Stewarton remained an inconsiderable and unnoted village; and it is only of a comparatively recent date that, owing to the general extension of trade and manufactures, it has increased to its present dimensions and consequence. It has, however, been long distinguished for the production of Highland or tartan and other bonnets, especially of regimental bonnets or caps: this business, which is chiefly carried on domestically, and partially in factories, furnishes employment to from three hundred and fifty to four hundred hands; whilst in the manufacture of carpets one hundred and fifty more persons find occupation. The making of spindles for cotton and woollen mills is an extensive branch here, and a considerable number of the cotton mills of Scotland are supplied from hence. The manufacture or forging of clock-work, for which this town is peculiar in North Britain, is a trade of some significance, as it forms an item of exportation to the continent of Europe and America. Several woollen mills are engaged in carding and spinning for the carpet and bonnet trades; the largest concern is that belonging to Alexander Kerr, Esq., of Robertsonland, and occupied by Messrs. Muir, Dunlop and Co., who have a steam-engine for propelling the machinery on the occurrence of droughts or frosts. A large portion of the population consists of silk and muslin weavers, who are employed by the Glasgow and Paisley establishments; linens and damasks are also issued from the Stewarton loom to some extent; and in the ingenious pursuit of 'Ayrshire needlework' not fewer than three hundred females enjoy the fruits of industry. The 'Glasgow Union Banking Company' have a branch of their firm in this place, and there is likewise a bank for savings; this latter institution, together with several benefit or friendly societies, creates a stimulus to the spirit of diligence and frugality in the working classes.

This thriving little town has no magistracy or police; but regular district courts for the recovery of small debts, and such business as falls under the jurisdiction of justices of the peace for the parishes of Stewarton, Dunlop, and Fenwick, are held by a quorum of the neighbouring magistrates. Besides the established church, there are three other places of worship, including a united secession church, one for original burghers, and the third for independent congregationalists. The market day is Thursday. The fairs are held as follow: on the Monday before Irvine fair, for the sale of horses, cattle, dairy produce and dairy utensils, and for the hiring of servants; on the last Thursday of June, or Thursday following (Shotts and Kelton Hill fairs), for horses and cattle; on the next Friday after the 12th November, for fat cattle, dairy stock, and hiring servants; and on the last Thursday of December, for horses and cattle.

DUNLOP is a small village, two miles and a half from Stewarton, romantically situate on the banks of the Swinsy, about three hundred yards off the road leading from Kilmarnock to Paisley; and when seen from a little distance, through the trees in which it is embosomed, has an agreeable retired appearance. The houses being mostly old, and the street narrow, it does not improve on a nearer view, though in this respect it does not suffer by comparison with other places of similar rank throughout the country. A new and handsome church was erected in 1835, its predecessor having suffered much from the combined effects of age and weather; it is a great ornament to the neighbourhood. In the church-yard is a small arched chamber, formed under the direction of Lord Viscount Clanaboyes, in 1641, over the grave of his father, the Rev. Hans Hamilton, who for 45 years was minister of this parish; it contains a well executed monument in marble, justly deserving attention.

The parish, to which the village gives name, lies principally in the bailery of Cunningham, and county of Ayr; but on the north it extends into Renfrewshire. It has long been noted for the excellent quality of its cheese, which bears a high character throughout Scotland. About the close of the seventeenth century one Barbara Gilmour is said to have commenced the practice of making cheese from the entire milk, nothing but skimmed milk having been used in the process, in this district, previously to that period; at present all the cheese similarly made in the western counties receives the appellation of 'Dunlop,' about 25,000 stones imperial are made in this parish annually. There is also a very considerable trade in meal carried on by the inhabitants of the village and the surrounding territory. Dunlop House, in this parish, the seat of John Dunlop, Esq., member of parliament for Ayrshire, is one of the handsomest mansions in the county: on this estate, resting on a small knoll, is a stone of large dimensions, called the 'O Great Stone,' supposed to have been employed in some ancient rites of worship. Two fairs, for the sale of dairy stock, take place here annually; one about the middle of May; the other on the 12th of November; both are almost invariably well attended.

STRAITON AND PATNA.

STRAITON is a neat village, in the parish of its name and district of Carrick; 80 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 26 s. from Kilmarnock, 14 s. by E. from Ayr, the like distance N.E. from Girvan, 8 s.E. from Maybole, the like distance N.E. from Daily, and 6 s.w.
from Dalmellington; and finely situated on the banks of the Girvan, and on the road leading from Glasgow to Newton-Stewart—48 miles s. by w. from the former, and 30 N. from the latter town. The parish, which extends about fifteen miles in length by five in breadth, consists for the most part of pasture land, the surface, especially in the south-east, being wild and rocky, interspersed with a number of small lakes; there is, however, a considerable supply of natural wood, and several extensive plantations; and, besides the Girvan and lakes, it is watered by the Doon. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in weaving. About half a mile south of the village are the vestiges of an oblong entrenchment, from which an extensive view is commanded; about this spot, the artificial work on which must be presumed to be of Roman origin, various ancient relics have been found, particularly two carved vases, or urns, containing ashes. Straiton has a neat parish church, and a parochial school. The Marquess of Ailsa, the Hon. Colonel F. M. Cathcart, and Sir

David Hunter Blair, are the proprietors of the land;

TORBOLTON, FAILFORD, STAIR, AND JOPPA.

TORBOLTON, or Tarbolton, is an attractive village, in the parish of its name and district of Kyle; 12 miles S.E. from Irvine, 8 s. from Kilmarnock, and 7 N. N.E. from Ayr; situate about five miles from the shore of the Frith of Clyde, surrounded by a fine country, and occupying a considerable space of ground, which is interspersed with some very handsome houses.

The church, rather an elegant structure, having a beautiful spire, surmounted by a clock with four dials, was completed in 1821, and cost upwards of £2,500. A neat chapel for burghers, a Sabbath-school, and several benefit societies, are in the village; there is also a subscription library. The parish is about seven and a half miles in length, and its average breadth about four and a half. The Duke of Portland, the Earl of Eglintoun, W. A. Cunningham, Esq., and Colonel Thomas Hunter Blair, are the principal heritors. A fair is held on the first Tuesday in June (old style), and on the first Wednesday in November (new style).

FAILFORD is a small village in the parish of Torbolton, three miles from that place. A manufactory for razor hones and strops, of a peculiar and excellent description, is carried on here by the inventor, Mr. Smith; the cases are veneered with wood, and are fini-shed much in the same style as the admired Scotch snuffboxes, forming an elegant and useful appendage to the dressing case.

The parish of STAIR is in the district of Kyle, lying on the south or right bank of the river Ayr, and extending six miles in length, by about two in breadth; it was first erected into an independent parish in 1653, when it was severed from Ochiltree for the accommodation of the noble family of Dalrymple, of Stair. The village of Stair, which comprises but a few dwellings and a neat parish church, is about two miles and a half from Torbolton; its situation is most romantic, and many highly ornamental mansions add to the beauty of the surrounding country. The neighbourhood abounds with mines of coal. The earldom of Stair is now merged in that of Dumfries; and the principal heritors of the land, at the present day, are Lord Glenlee and Sir James Boswell.

JOPPA is a village in the parish of Coylstou, five miles from Ayr. The church, which was erected in 1833, is a handsome structure, and contains sittings for seven hundred and fifty persons. The parish, which is adjacent to the west border of the district of Kyle, is about five miles in length, by about two in breadth.

TROON, DUNDONALD AND SYMINGTON.

TROON, an excellent and improving sea-port, in the parish of Dundonald, is situate 75 miles south-west from Edinburgh, 31 s. w. from Glasgow, 9 s. w. from Kilmarnock, and 6 s. from Irvine. Under the patronage of his Grace the Duke of Portland, this place is advancing steadily to a degree of eminence, and bids fair to become one of the most important sea-ports on the west coast of Scotland; possessing uncommon natural advantages, in having an extensive bay and a secure harbour, into which vessels of great burthen can confidently enter with the wind from almost any point, and anticipating the beneficial results to be expected from the completion of the grand line of railway from Glasgow to Preston, Troon is obviously destined to attain a high rank in maritime estimation. His Grace has of late been making material improvements in the harbour, by running out dykes and quays; and large basins are being formed, in which the shipping may moor in perfect safety: when these are finished, it will be securely protected from every blast. It has two superior dry docks for the repairing of vessels, large store-houses, a light-house, and a capacious wet dock in progress: the whole is, and has been for many years, under the immediate superintendance of Mr. John Wilson, civil engineer, the Duke's agent. His Grace has also a fine ship-building yard here, under the inspection and control of Mr. Robert Thomson; the vessels launched from it have not been surpassed in mould, speed, elegance, or workmanship: there are sixty men on an average employed in it. There is likewise a rope and sail manufactory in this place. From the extremity of the harbour directly to Kilmarnock runs a railway, on which immense quantities of coal are conveyed from the neighbourhood of the latter town, and from hence shipped for Ireland, &c.; about 100,000 tons are exported annually. By the latest returns the number of vessels employed in the shipping trade of Troon amounted to 1,066, with an aggregate burden of 79,291 tons, and 4,996 men; the number belonging to the port was 23—tonnage 3,194, employing 193 men. The village is progressively enlarging; and, in addition to the prosperity derived from its commerce as a port, it enjoys the advantage of being visited in the bathing season by numerous respectable families. The 'Portland Arms' is a respectable Inn and posting-house, and there are several other convenient public houses of an inferior grade. The place of worship is a chapel of ease, in connection with the parish church at the village of Dundonald.

DUNDONALD is a parish on the sea-coast, in the district of Carrick, extending eight miles along the shore from the water of Irvine toward the south; the village, situate about four miles and a quarter from Troon, contains a church of the establishment. Dundonald castle is a ruin of great celebrity, and occupies an elevated and commanding situation, within a mile of the sea.

The parish of SYMINGTON, in Kyle district, is bounded by Monkton on the south and Dundonald on the north; the village being situate about two miles from the latter, where is the parish church. The lands in this district were held, at a remote period, under Walter, the first Stewart, by Symon Loddard, from whom the place originally obtained the name which it bears at the present day.

WEST KILBRIDE AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

WEST KILBRIDE is a village, in the parish of its name and district of Cunningham; 73 miles w. s. w. from Edinburgh, 30 s. w. from Glasgow, 24 s. s. w. from Paisley, the like distance n. from Ayr, 22 s. from Greenock, 19 n. w. from Kilmarnock, 12 n. from Irvine, 7½ s. from Largs, 7 s. w. from Dalry, 5 n. from Saltcoats, the like distance s. from Fairlie, and 4 n. w. from Ardrossan; situate in a hollow, surrounded on all sides by rising grounds, which on the west protect it from the keen sea breezes, and on the opposite aspect from easterly winds. The scenery around is bold and romantic, interspersed with several genteel handsome residences. The ruins of Law castle and of Portencross are in the immediate vicinity of the village, and are both objects of interest to the curious in architectural relics. The principal employment of the inhabitants is weaving, in which about one hundred and forty looms are engaged; there is also a manufactory for charcoal, and a mill for grinding the article. In population and extent the village has materially increased within the recollection of many persons; in the former respect it has augmented more than two-fold in the progress of the last thirty years.

The places of worship are the parish church, and a small chapel in connexion with the united associate synod. The parochial school, a most useful institution, affords education upon very moderate terms to those who are enabled to pay, and gratuitously to such as are not blessed with the means of doing so; there is likewise a parochial library. The parish extends six miles along the shore of the Firth of Clyde, and inland from two to three miles. The district, independent of the ruins already mentioned, possesses other attractive vestiges of antiquity; and it is worthy of remark that, off the sea line of the parish, one of the largest vessels composing the Spanish Armada remains sunk in ten fathoms water; an attempt was made, about eighty-five years since, to examine the internal condition of this ship, and the operation succeeded so far that a piece of ordnance was raised from her hulk.

BANFFSHIRE.

THIS county, which is one of no great extent, is bounded on the north by the Frith of Moray, on the south and on the east by Aberdeenshire, and on the west by the shires of Moray and Inverness. Its form is elongated—irregularly concave towards its south-eastern border, and convex on its north-eastern; in breadth, at its widest part, it is about twenty miles, and its extreme length fifty; it diminishes to an apex at the extreme western end, but the base on the coast extends twenty-five miles. The course of the Deveron, for a considerable distance, forms the eastern boundary between this county and that of Aberdeen; and the Spey, with little impropriety, may be accounted its western limit with Morayshire. This district was at one time a component part of the large province of Moray, which altogether forms one of the finest tracts of ground in the northern part of Scotland. On the eastern side of the Deveron, in the district of Buchan, the parish of Gamrie and some other spots of land belong to Banffshire; so that, in all, the county presents a superficies of somewhat above one thousand square miles. By an intermixture of valleys and level ground among the ranges of hills, the country is agreeably diversified, and possesses many beautiful fertile spots, productive of the finest crops, or serviceable for the excellence of their green pasture.

SOIL, CLIMATE, PRODUCE AND MANUFACTURES.—The soil, with few exceptions, is deep loam or tenacious clay. The principal crops raised are barley, oats, turnips, potatoes, flax, grass, and in some places a small extent of pease. Under the auspices of parliamentary commissioners, the county of late years has experienced considerable improvement, and been opened up by new roads. Limestone may be quarried beneath the surface of nearly the whole county; and at Portsoy is a fine vein of serpentine stone, called 'Portsoy marble,' as well as a species of granite, which, when polished, exhibits the resemblance of Hebrew characters. Freestone, marl and slate are also found in various parts. The first MANUFACTURE introduced into this district still subsists, with an almost equal operation throughout the county—this is the spinning of flax, for the merchants of Glasgow, Paisley, Dundee, and Aberdeen; the manufacture of thread, both white and dyed, is also carried on, but not very extensively. The curing of fish is a branch of some consequence in the towns of Banff, Cullen, and Portsoy; and there are distilleries in several of the principal towns. The chief articles of export are black cattle, oats, salted or dried cod, ling, haddock and skate; the salmon of the Spey and Deveron, put together, are also an article of great consideration. The imports may be, in general, comprised under the necessaries and luxuries of life, not produced in the county. The CLIMATE of Banffshire is precarious. In the hilly districts, all the evils of cold and rain are often felt; and as frosts and snows frequently set in without any interval of good weather, the harvests are not only endangered, but the operations of husbandry are suspended for many of the winter months. The lower part of the shire, from Duff-house to Forglen, and Kinnairdy (a tract of about twelve miles along the river side), and from Banff to Gordon castle, including the districts of Boyne and Enzie, must be excepted, being nearly equal to the climate of Moray, and greatly surpassing the most part of the county in the fertility of the soil, the improvement of its agriculture, and the richness of its productions.

RIVERS, &c.—The waters of this county are the SPEY, the LIVET, the AVON, the FEDDICH, the DEVERON, the ISLA, the CONGLAS, and several more minute streams. The Deveron is not navigable; but this, as well as the Spey, yields excellent salmon fishing, and as such is the source of much comfort and wealth to the inhabitants. Along the coast there are a number of rivulets, which fall with a quick descent, and are useful in propelling machinery in different little towns and villages where manufactures are established, or have begun to make their appearance.

Banffshire comprehends twenty-eight parishes, or parts of parishes (some extending into, and others locally situate in, other counties); and contains two royal burghs, BANFF and CULLEN. One member is returned to parliament for the SHIRE: the contributory burghs (or those which, in conjunction with others, are represented in the senate), belonging to this county, are BANFF and CULLEN.

The principal eminences in the county are—Noath, 1,830; Buck, or Cabrach, 2,377; Knockbill, 2,500; Corryhabbie, 2,558; Belrinnes, 2,747; and Cairngorm, 4,244 feet above the level of the sea.

BANFF

IS a burgh of barony, the capital of the county and of the parish of its name; 155 miles N. by E. of Edinburgh (by the nearest route, and 177 by the mail road), 80 E. of Inverness, 46 N. by W. of Aberdeen, 35 E. of Elgin, 25 E. by N. of Fochabers, 13 E. of Cullen, and 8 E. by S. of Portsoy; pleasantly situate on the side of a hill overlooking the west bank of the Deveron and its confluence with the sea. This town was part of the ancient thanedon of Boim, whence the name seems to be derived—for, in some old charters, it is written Boineffe, and Baineffe. Tradition says it was founded by Malcolm Canmore, in 1163; and it was erected into a royal burgh, in 1372, by Robert II, who endowed it with the same privileges, and placed it on the same footing, as Aberdeen. It is governed by a provost, four bailies, and twelve councillors: the hammermen, shoemakers, tailors, coopers, weavers, and wrights, are the incorporated trades. Besides quarterly sessions, justice of the peace courts are held on the first Monday in every month. Banff, in conjunction with Cullen, Elgin, Inverury, Kintore, and Peterhead, returns one member to parliament.

The town comprises several well-built streets, and, although rather old-fashioned in appearance, is remarkably clean and neat. The principal street, which is handsome, is ornamented with a suitable modern town-house, surmounted by an elegant spire. The burgh is lighted with gas, and possesses public baths, a museum, a reading-room, and libraries. The river Deveron is here crossed by a substantially constructed bridge of seven arches, which gives access to the seaport of Macduff. From the bridge a splendid view is obtained on looking up the water, embracing Duff House, the seat of the Earl of Fife, rising out of a beautiful verdant park, and surrounded by an apparently interminable wilderness of trees; the park and plantations are said to comprise a circumference of fourteen miles. The front of this elegant mansion is elaborately decorated with sculpture, and the interior embellished with some excellent pictures, which no traveller of taste will inspect without admiration.

The inner harbour of Banff is secure, but has not a great depth of water. The outer basin, which is defended by a pier and breakwater, is likewise deficient in depth, except at the entrance; nor is it eligible as a haven of protection for vessels in stormy weather: a Morton's patent slip apparatus is here fitted up, and is frequently in operation. The chief trade, of an export nature, comprises salmon, herring, and other fish; some individuals are employed in the necessary process of curing. There is a respectable distillery.

The places of worship are a church of the establishment, of neat modern erection, and chapels belonging to episcopalians, seceders, independents, Roman Catholics, &c. 'Banff academy' ranks high as a scholastic institution; and, independent of other superior educational establishments, there are charity schools for the children of the more indigent classes. A castle of considerable strength and magnitude formerly raised its feudal battlements over this spot; but, of all that might convey a conception of its grandeur or importance, no vestige remains but part of the ancient wall, the moat, and traces of the entrenchments; a modern mansion now occupies part of its site. In this town and its neighbourhood are the residences of a great number of wealthy and respectable families, who contribute materially to the support of the place, and diffuse the blandishments of politeness and fashion throughout its society. On the occurrence of the heavy floods in August, 1829, Banff was subjected to all the alarms and dangers of a destructive inundation: the lower grounds around Duff House were deluged to the height of fourteen feet; the streets adjacent to the river were in nearly a similar predicament, and the most serious apprehensions were entertained of the stability of the bridge; the royal mail, the progress of which through the town was hazardingly attempted, was completely swamped, with the loss of three of the horses. The weekly market is held on Friday, and one for corn every alternate week on that day. There are four annual fairs, namely, Brandon fair on the first Tuesday in February (old style); on the 20th of May, if it falls on a Tuesday, otherwise on the first Tuesday after the 26th; Lammas fair on Lammas-day (old style); and Christmas fair on Christmas-day (old style).

BUCKIE, PORT GORDON &amp; NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BUCKIE is a village, in the parish of Ezie, both of which places, with their vicinities, formed until lately part of Rathven parish; 186 miles N. N. E. from Edinburgh, 18 w. from Banff, 7 N. from Fochabers, and 6 w. from Cullen; situate on both sides of the burn (or brook) of Buckie; one part belonging to Colonel Gordon, of Clunie—the other to Sir James Gordon, of Letterfourie. The inhabitants are mainly engaged in fishing, and are famed throughout Scotland for their industry and hardihood in braving the perils of their avocation; as a natural consequence, their services are eagerly sought at the several herring-fishing stations on the Moray Frith. The village is of considerable extent; but this is attributable more to the irregular manner in which the habitations are scattered over the surface of the ground, than to the amount of population. In New Buckie a very handsome church was erected in 1835, the tricentury of the reformation, and the tower bears an inscription to that effect.

CULLEN AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

CULLEN is a royal burgh, a maritime town, and the capital of the parish of its name; 191 miles N.N.E. of Edinburgh, 22 E. of Elgin, 13 N.E. of Fochabers, 14 W. of Banff, and 6 W. of Portsoy; situate on a commanding eminence, overlooking the Moray Frith. Until within the last fifteen years it consisted of three independent and distinct towns: the NEW TOWN, near the sea, with a harbour—the AULD TOWN, more inland, and adjoining to the parks of Cullen House—and the FISH TOWN, a low village, exclusively inhabited by fishermen and their families. The Auld Town no longer exists, and the park of the Earl of Seafield occupies its site: to this nobleman the town is indebted for those improvements and modern erections which have conferred upon it that aspect of neatness and respectability so apparent, and raised it to the rank of the third town in the shire. In the principal street, which is composed of many handsome houses, is a very superior hotel, one of the largest in the north of Scotland. The manufacture and bleaching of linen goods exists here to a limited extent; and the curing of fish, and its exportation when dried, is carried on by several of the inhabitants: ready markets for this commodity are found at Montrose, Arbroath, Dundee, Leith, and other places, after supplying the town and neighbouring districts. The acting magistrates are three bailies, with a treasurer, dean of guild, and 13 councillors. The burgh joins with Banff, Elgin, Inverury, Kintore, and Peterhead, in returning a member to parliament.

An elegant temple, of stone, was some few years since erected upon an elevated spot of ground, very near the sea, and not far from Cullen House; this latter is an ancient and irregular edifice; the interior is, however, furnished with modern taste, and adorned with paintings by the most eminent masters. Cullen stream passes under the south walls; and on the opposite side are the park and pleasure-grounds, which are connected with the house by an elegant arch of 84 feet span. Not far distant are the ruins of a dwelling in which Elizabeth, queen of Robert Bruce, is said to have died. An eminence called Castle-hill, at the western extremity of the town, is the site of an ancient fortification, which must formerly have been a place of great strength: an almost perpendicular rock renders it inaccessible from the north, and it is surrounded in every other direction by a deep ditch; it is supposed to have been destroyed by fire, as vitrified stones have been frequently extracted from beneath the surface. Fairs are held on the 7th January, the third Friday in May, and second Friday in November (new style); and the last Tuesday in September (old style).

DUFFTOWN IN MORTLACH.

DUFFTOWN is a village of modern date (having been erected within the last twenty years), in the parish of Mortlach; 118 miles N. of Edinburgh, 49 N.W. of Aberdeen, 29 S.W. of Banff, 14 N.E. of Inveraven, and 4 S. of Aberlour; situate a short way to the north of the old decayed hamlet of Mortlach, near the junction of the Dullan and the Fiddich waters. The village is rapidly improving in appearance, extent and population, under the auspices of its patron and owner, the Earl of Fife. This parish is famous as the scene of the signal victory gained over the Danes by Malcolm II: and the district possesses the ruins of the castles of Anchedune and Balney, of which Mr. Gordon, in his 'Statistical Account of Scotland,' says—'When a stranger is travelling through this part of Scotland for curiosity or pleasure, they deserve his attention, and will contribute to his amusement.' The parish church is in the immediate vicinity of the village, which also contains a neat Roman catholic chapel, constructed in the modern Gothic style of architecture. Fairs are held on the first Tuesday in January, first Wednesday in April, Monday before first Tuesday in June (old style); the second Thursday in July, third Thursday in August, and third Thursday in December (new style).

INVERAVEN,

A PARISH on the banks of the river Aven, lies chiefly in Banffshire, and a small portion in the county of Moray; about 42 miles S.W. of Banff, 72 W.N.W. of Aberdeen, 8 S.W. of Aberlour, 12 from Mortlach, 22 S.W. of Keith, 14 S. of Rothes, 22 S. by W. of Fochabers, and 22 S. of Elgin. Besides the Aven and the Spey, it is watered by the Livet. The surface is irregular, but cannot be described as mountainous, except the lofty region of Belrinnes, which is mostly in this parish, and abounds in grouse. The district of Glen-Livet is remarkably fertile, and noted for the excellence of its whisky; the sides of the river are shaded with copses of birch and alder, and on the banks of the Spey there is a considerable extent of oak. Ballindalloch, the elegant mansion of G. Grant, Esq., is pleasantly situated at the confluence of the Aven and Spey. A dilapidated castle, called Drummin, and the ruins of Castle tower, are among the remains of antiquity. A

KEITH,

A RESPECTABLE market and post town, in the parish of its name (which is chiefly in the county of Banff, and extends into that of Moray), is 170 miles N. of Edinburgh, 20 S.W. of Banff, 17 E. S. E. of Elgin, 50 N. E. of Aberdeen, 60 E. of Inverness, 8 E. by S. of Fochabers, 13 S. W. of Portsoy, and 12 S. of Cullen; situate on the banks of the Isla, in the centre of an amphitheatre of hills. It is divided into three distinct towns, namely, Old Keith, New Keith, and Fife Keith; the latter, erected by the Earl of Fife, is separated from Old and New Keith by the Isla. The old town has declined considerably since the establishment of the new: New Keith was begun about the year 1750, by the Earl of Findlater, upon a barren tract of land, fenced off in tenements of 15 yards by 60; it is formed on a regular plan of three parallel streets and a square; in the latter are held the fairs and the weekly markets. There are no authentic documents to record the origin of Old Keith, but it has certainly existed upwards of five hundred years. The government of the town is vested in a baron bailie. About half a mile from the town, on the banks of the Isla, is a wool carding mill; there are also a flax mill and corn mills in the neighbourhood; one of the latter, built upon an improved plan, and under the patronage of the Earl of Fife, occupies the site of the old mill, which was known as 'the mill of Keith.' Three branches of the respectable establishments of the 'Aberdeen Banking Company,' the 'Aberdeen Town and County Bank,' and the 'National Bank of Scotland,' are in operation in this town. Besides the usual trades of a local and domestic nature, there are dye-works, a distillery, and a tan-yard; likewise an excellently conducted Inn, the 'Gordon Arms,' in Mid-street. On the Cairds Hill, denoting the 'hill of fiends,' are the remains of a druidical temple, near which several tumuli have been opened, and found to contain various sepulchral remains. Tradition relates that an encounter took place in Old Keith, upwards of 150 years ago, between Mr. Gordon, of Glenгарick, and Roy M'Gregor, the leader of a band of robbers, who, after a desperate resistance, was defeated, himself taken, and his gang destroyed.

A new church of the establishment was opened for public worship in 1819; it is an elegant and commodiously constructed edifice, in the neat modern Gothic style of architecture, with accommodation for a congregation of two hundred, and is considered the most beautiful temple for religious service in the north of Scotland; only a part of the ruins of the old church is now visible, the stones having been appropriated to the formation of a wall round the parish cemetery. The episcopalian, seceders, and Roman catholics, have each a place of worship. The inhabitants have the advantage of four libraries, viz. two evangelical, a subscription, and a juvenile one. There are also several friendly societies: the St. James's Lodge of Operatical Freemasons is the most numerous in the country; and a new lodge of Geometrical Freemasons has been for some time founded, under the auspices of the Earl of Fife, which, in point of respectability, equals any institution of the kind. Weekly markets are held on Wednesday and Friday, the former the principal one for business. At New Keith four annual fairs take place, namely, on the first Tuesday in April, the first Tuesday in June, the first Tuesday in September, for cattle (and continues the two following days), and the first Tuesday after Martinmas—all old style; at Fife Keith the fairs are on the first Thursday in March, and the second Thursday in the months of May, July, and October—all old style.

MACDUFF

Is a sea-port town, in the parish of Gamrie; situate about a mile east from the town of Banff, on the opposite side of the Deveron river, and on the declivity of a hill descending towards the sea-shore. This town has risen, since the early part of the eighteenth century, from being little more than the hutage of a few fishermen, to a place of respectable size and considerable trade. It is built on the property of the Earl of Fife, whose splendid seat lies in this neighbourhood; and to this nobleman it has been indebted for its chief improvements and prosperity: through his influence it was created a burgh of barony by George III, in 1783, when its name was altered from Doon to its present appellation; it has from that period increased rapidly in extent and consequence; contains a handsome church, a grammar-school, a town-house, and a gaol. The church, or rather chapel of ease, occupies a conspicuous position on the eminence; and Lord Fife has ornamented his precincts with a cross, which is highly effective at a little distance. The same munificent patron has expended a vast sum in the erection and improvement of the harbour, which is now considered one of the best on the Moray Frith; as a station of the herring fishery it is exceedingly valuable, a greater supply of that fish being obtained and shipped from this port than from any other between Fraserburgh and Cromarty. The greater proportion of the grain produced for twenty miles east of Macduff is exported from hence, as are salmon, cod, and excellent granite; and the country inland is supplied with coal, bone manure and lime imported here. Several vessels trade with London and the Baltic; the number of fishing-boats is very considerable; and in the curing of fish there are some respectable establishments, and many of the inhabitants obtain in this branch comfortable and even lucrative employment. The town is governed by a provost, bailies, and council; and it has a weekly market on Tuesday.

The parish of Gamrie extends about eleven miles, by an average breadth of about two and a half. The coast is bold and precipitous, and indented with cavers. The land is partly under tillage, and partly devoted to pasturage; plantations are rising in several quarters, and other beneficial improvements are in progress in this parish—the whole of which belongs to the Earl of Fife, and Mr. Garden, of Troup.

PORTSOY

Is a sea-port in the parish of its name, which, until recently, formed part of the parish of Fordyce; 178 miles N. of Edinburgh, 80 E. by N. of Inverness, 18 E. N. E. of Foehabers, and 8 W. by N. of Banff; situate on a tongue of land projecting into the Moray Frith, at the head of one of those little bays by which this part of the coast is in many places indented. It was erected into a burgh of barony about the sixteenth century, by the baron of Boyne, whose descendants, embracing the fortunes of the pretender, in 1715, forfeited their lands to the crown; they were subsequently granted to the Earl of Findlater and Seafield, and are still in possession of that family. The town is small and irregularly built, but as a port it is in a thriving condition: the point of land on which it stands forms a safe harbour, which has been greatly improved lately by the liberality of the Hon. Colonel Grant; and it is now sufficiently deep to moor vessels of upwards of two hundred tons burthen. Besides the proceeds of the herring fishery, which has been actively prosecuted for some years, it enjoys a trade in the exportation of grain and stone, and the importation of coal; fish-curing, flax-dressing, a woollen manufactory, and a distillery, are prominent branches among the general domestic business, which, combined with the income resulting from the traffic of its port, has elevated Portsoy into rather a consequential position as a commercial town. The stone raised from the quarries of this district (which has obtained the name of 'Portsoy marble') is a beautiful mixture of red, green, and white accumulations, and is wrought into tea-cups, vases, and small ornaments, but not frequently into chimney-pieces, being found too hard and brittle for that purpose. Some singular specimens of schistus, and a species of asbestos of a greenish hue, are met with in this neighbourhood; but the most remarkable mineral production is a granite, of a buff or flesh colour, which, except here and in Arabia, has not been discovered throughout the world. The export of these different natural rarities is considerable, and adds to the inflowing wealth of the district, which likewise abounds with excellent limestone. The burgh is under the jurisdiction of a baron bailie, and the Earl of Seafield is superior. The places of worship are a church of the establishment, an episcopal chapel, and one for Roman catholics. According to a census recently taken, the population of the town amounted to upwards of two thousand persons.

BERWICKSHIRE.

THIS is the most south-easterly county of Scotland: it is bounded on the east by the North Sea, on the west by the counties of Edinburgh and Selkirk, on the north the range of Lammermoor hills separate it from the county of Haddington, and on the south it is bordered by Northumberland and Roxburghshire, having a detached portion of the county of Durham upon its south-eastern limits. Its form is an irregular oblong square, measuring from east to west nearly thirty-four miles, and from north to south about twenty; and its area comprehends four hundred and forty-six square miles. It is divided into three districts, namely, MERSE, LAMMERMOOR (or Lammermuir), and LAUDERDALE. The Merse, so called from the word march, or boundary, is the largest and most valuable district, and occasionally gives name to the whole county: it is the most compact and extensive piece of level ground in Scotland, comprising about 130,000 statute acres; in appearance it resembles a wide-spread portion of some of the English fertile counties; and being well inclosed, and enriched with trees and plantations, when viewed from any of the gentle eminences which its surface occasionally presents, it looks like a vast garden. Lammermoor, which consists of nearly 90,000 statute acres, is a highly pastoral district, with generally a wild brown aspect; and runs on the northern border of the Merse so as to effectually divide the fine vales of Edinburgh and Haddington shires from the beautiful valley of the Tweed: but for this chain of blackish obstructive hills, the prospect from Edinburgh would be carried the length of the Cheviots. The district of Lauderdale, which has received this title from the Leader Water, along whose banks it ranges, is a mixture of hill and dale, the land in the valleys being essentially arable: this portion of the county contains about 67,000 statute acres.

At the period of the Roman invasion, Berwickshire was inhabited by tribes of British, called Ottadini; and it was subsequently overrun by bands of Saxons, who engrafted their language and manners on those of the original inhabitants. The conquests of these foreigners extended a considerable way along the shores to the east and west; and in the course of time they gave the land of which they thus possessed themselves the title of Lothian, which it still retains in the western division. The entire area of Berwickshire was comprised in this Saxon territory, which was distinguished by the name of Saxonia, superseding its previous designation, Bernicia. Until the year 1020, this district of country was included within the kingdom of Northumberland; in that year it was ceded to King Malcolm II, by Cospatrik, Earl of Northumberland, who settled in Scotland, and was created Earl of Dunbar. About the beginning of the eleventh century many Norman and Anglo-Saxon families settled in Berwickshire, as well as in other parts of Scotland, and were the founders of a number of noble houses still ranked in the peerage of the country. It appears, likewise, that the town of Berwick became a settlement of Flemish and other foreign tradesmen; and it is recorded as a fact, that at Berwick originated those laws which were framed and applied in Scotland for the regulation of burghs and their guild associations. Being the threshold of the Scottish kingdom in entering from England, Berwickshire suffered, in the succeeding centuries, in all the wars between the two hostile nations, and was occasionally involved in jurisdictional disputes with its ecclesiastical neighbour, the Palatine Bishop of Durham; and Berwick, and its bridge across the Tweed, were in general the main objects of contention. The description of Berwick will be found under the more appropriate head of that town (page 295). From the variety of successes and disasters which Berwickshire underwent for so many centuries, and from its successive occupation by different mixed nations, the people of this part of North Britain have not that distinct Scottish character so directly recognised in places more distant from the frontier: by their language and personal appearance, especially the former, the inhabitants of Berwick and its neighbourhood are easily particularized; and, in common with the Northumbrians, they speak with that remarkable burr which is found nowhere else in the kingdom. The women are famed for their beauty—the men for their gallant bearing in times of warlike strife: ‘the Men of Merse’ distinguished themselves at Flodden, and other bloody fields, under the command of Lord Home; and there is a tradition that a party, led to the Holy Land by some of their feudal chiefs, obtained on its ensanguined plains the highest honours for their unconquerable intrepidity. When Charles I paid his first visit to Scotland, in 1633, Lord Home met him at Berwick with a train of six hundred Merse gentlemen, ‘gallantly arrayed’ on horseback. The present generation has seen that the yeomanry of the Merse have lost no portion of the military spirit of their ancestors.

PRODUCE, MINERALS, MANUFACTURES, &c.—Within the last forty years very great exertions have been made to improve the agricultural character of the county, and in this respect it differs nothing from the neighbouring territory of East Lothian: the country is thickly but not redundantly populated with a most intelligent, active peasantry and farming class. The exports of Berwickshire consist of great quantities of corn, coal, sheep, and eggs; and these, indeed, may be considered as the extent of its commerce. Minute investigation has failed in discovering minerals or fossils in sufficient supply to be of great general benefit, although some coal exists in the vicinity of Berwick, and in the parishes of Mordington and Cockburnspath; and limestone is, almost consequently, found in its proximity. Marl and gypsum have likewise been raised; and freestone and whinstone, of various kinds, abound in every part of the shire. As coal is introduced from Durham by an easy land-carriage, the district of the Merse does not feel the absence of that valuable fuel very severely; but in some other parts of the shire, as throughout the upper portion of the vale of Tweed, this article is dear. Berwickshire is strictly pastoral and agricultural—manufactures, as yet, have made little or no progress within its borders; what is connected with this system of industry finds its chief seat at the principal town, Berwick, where linens, sackings, sailcloths and ropes are made, flax dressed and spun, and the iron trade exists to a considerable degree of importance; the curing of herrings, in this quarter, is a somewhat extensive occupation; and it is from hence that large shipments of corn and coal are made.

RIVERS.—The waters of this county flow in general either to the south or north-east. The Tweed, which is an imposing stream, and the most lovely of Scottish rivers, from its sparkling clearness and its soft sylvan banks, receives all the currents that are poured down from the northern eminences: it is not susceptible of navigation; but it is of great value from its salmon fisheries, which are under a strict system of water police. The Leader, the Eden, and the united streams of the Blackadder and the Whiteadder course into the Tweed. The Eye is the only other river; it falls into the sea at Eye-mouth. The Eden, which runs southward from Lammermoor, has a remarkable fall, near the house of Newton Don, of above forty feet, exhibiting a fine appearance when there is a flood. It is a peculiarity of the Blackadder, that no salmon can live in it—if any happen to enter, they are said to die in a few days; though they are caught plentifully in the Whiteadder, which also abounds with trout and whitebings; these latter attain a larger size than the trout; their flesh is red, and in flavour bears a partial affinity to that of salmon.

Berwickshire comprehends (exclusive of Berwick town) thirty-three parishes, and two parts of parishes; and contains one royal burgh, LAUDER. One member is returned for the shire. The only contributory burgh (or that which, in conjunction with others, is represented in the senate,) in this county, is LAUDER; the others, representatively connected with it, are HADDINGTON, DUNBAR, and NORTH BERWICK, in Haddingtonshire—and JEDBURGH, in Roxburghshire. Berwick-upon-Tweed is a royal burgh, and sends two members; but is not classed as an integral portion of this county.

The eminences of Berwickshire are not of such magnitude or interest as to require particular description: those of the greatest altitude above the level of the sea are—Soutra Hill, 1,716 feet; Crib-Law, 1,615; Clint Hill, 1,544; Tippet-Knows, 1,323; Twin-Law, 1,260; and Darrington-Law, 1,145.

TOTAL POPULATION OF BERWICKSHIRE . . . . .							30512	30779	33286	33901	3822

Note.—(a) The Population of BERWICK-UPON-TWEED will be found given in the succeeding page. In the Government Census the population of that town is returned under the county of Northumberland.
 (b) The parish of Oldhamstocks is mostly in the county of Haddington, and is there wholly entered.
 (c) The parish of Stitchell is mostly in Roxburghshire, and is there wholly entered.

BERWICK-UPON-TWEED, TWEEDMOUTH, SPITAL, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BERWICK-UPON-TWEED (so denominated to distinguish it from North Berwick, in East Lothian, and several Berwicks in England) is a royal burgh and sea-port, entitled, under the new municipal reform act, 'the county of the borough and town of Berwick-upon-Tweed; 334 miles N. by W. from London, 64 N. by W. from Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and 49 N. from Morpeth; from the city of Edinburgh it is distant S.E. 59 miles, and from Glasgow E. by S. 103. It is a town of considerable importance, of Saxon or Teutonic origin. The etymology of its name is as doubtful as the period of its first establishment is obscure. Maitland, the historian of Edinburgh, entered into a dissertation to prove that the title was transferred by the Saxon founders from a town of note, of the same name, in their own country—in the like manner as European emigrants designate cities and towns on the continent of America; others, and among the rest Camden, allege that the word Berwick is deduced from Berwicca, signifying 'a village belonging to a manor;' while a third party, with more feasibility, derive it from bar and wick, 'a castle on the bend of a river.' But, in whatever manner, or from whom, Berwick received its appellation, it was fortified and defended by a garrison at a very remote period of British history; it became the chief town of the district, and was the centre, on various occasions, of many important transactions. It is situate on the north side of the river Tweed, about half a mile from the spot where that celebrated stream empties itself into Berwick bay, and is lost in the expanse of the German ocean. Prior to the year 1551 it was a Scots town; but it was then erected into a free burgh, or distinct liberty, in some measure independent of either kingdom—having a small district attached to it, called 'Berwick bounds,' which stretched about three miles north, and the like distance ascending the Tweed. The antiquity of Berwick, from the facts already stated, will not admit of dispute; it may be added, that it is described as a large and populous town so early as the reign of David I, of Scotland—is mentioned as a place of redoubtable strength in the time of Osbert, one of the last kings of Northumberland—and is assumed to be the point where the Danes landed, in one of their incursions under Hubba, in the year 867. It continued in the possession of the Saxons for some ages, and subsequently was held by the Danes, until the Scottish king Gregory (who was cotemporary with Alfred the Great) took it by assault. About the year 1098 Berwick was annexed to the see of Durham, by Edgar; but the gift was soon after resumed, in consequence of the ingratitude of Ralph Flambert, who had been consecrated bishop of that see. William I, of Scotland, who, in 1174, had joined Henry's three sons in rebellion, was taken prisoner near Alnwick, and conducted in chains before Henry, who obliged him to pay homage for the whole of Scotland; and, as a security, he was forced to deliver up to Henry the fort of Berwick, together with all the principal forts of Scotland. In 1291 the states of England and Scotland, with Edward I, assembled at Berwick, to determine the claims of Robert Bruce and John Balliol to the Scottish crown, when, after numerous conferences, on the 17th of November, in the following year, the king appointed John Balliol successor to the crown. This town, which until lately had regular fortifications, was formerly the principal

one of the kingdom of Merse: it stands on a gentle declivity, at a short distance from the sea; its gates, walls, and a draw-bridge, are yet standing, but the cannon have for some time been removed to Leith; a ditch aided its defence on the north-east, and the river served for a moat on the south side; the ancient castle, which must have been of great strength, is in ruins, and merely an attractive object to the antiquary.

Berwick is a regular well-built town, connected with England by a firmly-constructed bridge of hewn stone, of fifteen spacious and elegant arches; the entire length of the bridge is 1,164 feet, and its width 17 feet; at each of the pillars, which are fourteen in number, there is an outlet to both sides, for the greater safety of foot-passengers when carriages, &c. approach in opposite directions; it was commenced in the reign of Elizabeth, but not completed until that of Charles I, and in those days was computed to have cost £15,000: the sixth pillar, from the Berwick side, separates that town from the county palatine of Durham. Since the passing of the reform act, a very material alteration has taken place in the government of this burgh: the guilds, formerly held by the mayor, bailiff and burghesses, are now discontinued, with the exception of only two annually, viz. the meadow and stint guilds; the new governing body being the council, consisting of twenty-four, namely, the mayor, six aldermen, and seventeen councillors: the recorder (Robert Ingham, Esq.) is sole judge at quarter sessions and courts of pleas, but, in the absence of the recorder, the mayor and the four bailiffs act as judges in the latter court. A gaol delivery is held quarterly, if necessary, for the trial of capital offences; general quarter sessions are held four times in the year; a court of pleas, for the recovery of debts to any amount, and for the trial of land actions; and the mayor and bailiffs, as lords of the manor, hold courts leet and baron twice in the year. Berwick returns two members to parliament; those elected to the first reformed legislature, in 1832, were Sir Francis Blake, Bart. and Sir Rufane Shawe Donkin, K.C.B.: the present members are the last named gentleman and J. Bradshaw, Esq. The number of votes registered at the election for 1832, was 699, including 436 resident burghesses, and 223 occupiers of houses of £10. and upwards—of the latter, 61 were in the townships of Tweedmouth and Spittal: the sheriff is elected annually, and is returning officer. The new boundary act defines the limits of the borough to comprise the parish of Berwick, and the respective townships of Tweedmouth and Spittal; the same act appoints Berwick one of the polling stations for taking votes at the election of knights of the shire for its northern division.

The principal branches of maritime trade comprise the exportation of grain, and of salmon caught in the Tweed, which are sent to the London market; the fishing season commences on the 15th February, and terminates on the 15th October; the more generally chosen part of the river for this pursuit is from the mouth of the Norham stream, a distance of seven miles. Numerous coal mines are in the neighbourhood, and their produce also forms a most important export article from hence. Owing to its increasing consequence, Berwick has of late years been raised in the scale of ports; has obtained the privilege of the warehousing act, 6th George IV; and is now a bonded port, for the reception of timber, wines and colonial produce. The country around is well adapted to the purposes of agriculture; and though in general flat, yet are some fine views to be had in the vicinity; while the town and harbour present a considerable portion of that activity observable in prosperous commercial seaports.

The public erections, besides those appropriated to divine worship, are the beautiful town-hall, the exchange, the barracks, the fine bridge before described, the ramparts, and a noble pier of great length; the two latter form fashionable and delightful walks. There is but one church here under the establishment; it is dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and is a flat-roofed Gothic edifice: the building was begun in 1648, and finished in 1652; from being destitute of either tower or spire, it has rather a singular appearance, but these were considered unnecessary ornaments in the days of Cromwell. The tombstones in the church-yard, from their great number, strike the stranger with surprise, and are apt to impress him with the idea that the town is unhealthy; but the number of these mementos proceeds merely from the cheapness at which monuments can be here erected. The living of Berwick is a vicarage, in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Durham, and incumbency of the Rev. Joseph Barnes. The other places of worship are the high and low meeting-houses in connexion with the church of Scotland, two chapels for the united associate synod, and others for baptists, methodists, and Roman catholics. There are many valuable schools, six of which were founded by the corporation, for the education of burghers' children of both sexes; also a Latin grammar-school, in connexion with the corporation; a charity school, supported by various bequests; a school of industry, a parochial one for the children of the work-house, and others upon the national and Sunday plans. Two newspapers are published here weekly, on Saturday, namely, the 'Berwick Advertiser,' and the 'Berwick and Kelso Warder.' An excellent dispensary for the gratuitous relief of the sick poor, a public library, a reading-room, and a number of benevolent institutions, are well supported. The weekly market is held on Saturday, and there is one for the sale of fat cattle on the first Saturday in every month; the annual fairs take place on the Friday in Trinity week for cattle, the second Wednesday in May, the Wednesday preceding the 26th of August, and the first Wednesday in November, all chiefly for cattle. The parish of Berwick contained, by the census for 1821, 8,723 inhabitants; and by that for 1831, 8,920. The borough (which includes Tweedmouth) contained, at the latter period, a population of 13,891.

POST OFFICE, Western-lane, BERWICK, James Forster, Post Master.—Letters from LONDON and all parts of the SOUTH arrive every morning at a quarter before nine, and are despatched every afternoon at a quarter before two.—Letters from EDINBURGH and all parts of the NORTH arrive every afternoon at a quarter before two, and are despatched every morning at a quarter before nine.—Letters from COLDESTREAM, JEDBURGH, KELSO, PAXTON, &c. arrive (by foot-post) every morning at eight, and are despatched every afternoon at a quarter past two.

TWEEDMOUTH is a parochial chapelry (now forming a part of the borough of Berwick), in Islandshire, and connected with the county of Durham. It is situated at the south end of the bridge, about a quarter of a mile from Berwick, and consists of several streets, irregularly built, but the general appearance of the place has been much improved of late years. Here is a chapel of ease; the living is in the same patronage as that of Berwick; the Rev. Jno. Leach is the incumbent. Here is also a large and commodious meeting-house, in connexion with the church of Scotland. The inhabitants, as in Berwick, are extensively engaged in the salmon fishery; and its other branches of trade, exports and imports, are of the like nature with that town, with the addition of an extensive iron foundry; it has also a railway communication with the neighbouring coal mines. The population at the last census (1831) was 4,971.

SPITTAL is a populous village, in the parish of Tweedmouth, situate at the mouth of the river, about three quarters of a mile from Berwick, and also forming a part of the parliamentary borough. It is chiefly inhabited by fishermen and colliers. An important rail-road runs through the main street, and great quantities of coals are exported. Many excellent houses, for the accommodation of visitors, have of late years been built, and it is much resorted to in summer as a bathing place. It has also a valuable mineral spa, the waters of which contain fixed air, iron, and a portion of sulphuric acid. Here is a large chapel for independents. Herring curing is carried on in this village to a great extent.—Population included with Tweedmouth.

CHIRNSIDE

IS a village and parish, the latter lying in the eastern part of the Merse, on the northern side of the Whiteadder, and extending four miles in length by about three in breadth. The village (a burgh of baiony) is 50 miles E. by S. from Edinburgh, 13½ N. N. E. from Greenlaw, 9 N. W. from Berwick, and 6 N. from Dunse; situate on the brow of a hill. It consists of two streets, the buildings of which are for the most part detached and straggling, and extend nearly a mile in length. The places of worship are a church of the establishment and a Cameronian meeting-house.

From Chirnside hill, one of the eminences projecting from the Lammernoor range, a fine view of a

COCKBURNSPATH

IS a parish on the sea-coast; the village being 35½ miles E. from Edinburgh, 21 N. from Greenlaw, 14 N. from Dunse, 8 S. E. from Dunbar, and 21 N. W. from Berwick, situate on the road between the two last-named towns. The shore is precipitous, presenting a line of cliffs about one hundred feet above the level of the sea; behind the cliffs, the ground rises gently toward the hills, having many deep glens, or ravines, whose sides are sometimes sloping and covered with verdure, but the general appearance is rocky, with overhanging woods. Over one of these ravines, cut by the tortuous course of the Pease-burn, is thrown 'the Peaths,' or Pease-bridge, planned and erected by Mr. Henderson, in 1786: it is one hundred and twenty-three feet from the bottom of the Pease-burn, which flows beneath—three hundred feet in length, and fifteen in width; it is looked upon as a masterpiece of architecture, is understood to be the highest bridge in the world, and is consequently an object of peculiar attraction to the curious visiting these parts. Nearly a quarter of a mile above the bridge are the remains of an ancient castle, distinguished by no other appellation than that of the 'old tower.' As this parish is near the boundary of the two kingdoms, many traces of camps are visible on the rising grounds, and indelible proofs of military operations in former days arrest the eye in the passes. The ruins of the church of Auld Cambus, formerly united to this parish, are still standing. A church of the establishment, and a secession chapel, are in the parish.

COLDINGHAM.

THIS village, a burgh of barony, in the parish of its name, is 45 miles E. of Edinburgh, 21 N. N. E. of Greenlaw, 17 S. E. of Dunbar, 13 N. N. E. of Dunse, and 11 N. N. W. of Berwick; delightfully situate upon a small eminence in the centre of a fine valley, at a short distance from the sea, and near to the noted foreland, St.
 Abb's Head, an opening from the Frith of Forth into the German ocean. Its antiquity is unquestionably great, for it is distinctly pointed out in Ptolemy's map of Britain under the Roman sway; and in this respect surpasses Berwick and other more considerable towns, whose existence is not authenticated for some ages posterior. About a mile west from St. Abb's is Col-dingham Loch, of a triangular figure, and estimated at a mile in circumference. The village consists of two or three humble streets, with a cross in the centre.
 On its south side are the ruins of the once magnificent and well-endowed priory of Coldingham, rebuilt by King Edgar, who personally assisted at its consecration: all that now remains of this edifice is the east gable and north side, which form part of the modern parish kirk, with a few straggling fragments, including a small Saxon arch, part of the palace said to have been erected here by the royal founder of the priory;

 at one time this religious house stood at the head of such establishments in Scotland, and was famed far and wide for its wealth and importance. When the church of the priory was destroyed, its fine-toned bell, according to tradition, was carried off to Lincoln.
 Fast Castle, in this neighbourhood, is supposed to be the place described as 'Wolfe's Craig,' in the novel of 'The Bride of Lammermuir.' A church belonging to the national establishment, and a chapel of the united associate synod, are the only places of worship.

COLDSTREAM AND ECCLES.

COLDSTREAM is a market town, in the parish of its name; 47 miles S.E. from Edinburgh, 14 S.W. from Berwick, 10 S.E. from Greenlaw, the like distance S. from Dunse, and 9 N.E. from Kelso; situate on the north bank of the Tweed, and formerly derived importance from a ford on that river: by this passage Edward I entered Scotland, with his forces, in 1296;
 and many other English and Scottish armies, before the union of the crowns, made their way by this facility to ravage the country of their respective enemies:
 it was last used by a Scottish army as an entrance into England in 1640, when the covenanters found it necessary to have recourse to that extreme measure against Charles I. The Tweed is now crossed, at this place, by a strong bridge of red freestone, consisting of five arches, which forms a main link of communication between the two nominal divisions of the island: it is placed at the distance of a furlong from the east end of the town; and from this spot a very delightful view, up and down the woody banks of the river, presents itself. The town is irregularly built—quite Scottish in its appearance, notwithstanding its proximity to England. It is the chief thoroughfare from Edinburgh to Newcastle and parts in that direction, and its general business and prosperity is materially promoted by this circumstance; while its border situation has rendered it eligible to participate with Gretna-green in the clau-destine matrimonial trade. It contains two Inns, and the British Linen Company has a branch of its highly respectable and useful banking establishment here.

The places of worship are a church of the establishment, and chapels for the united secession and relief congregations. Previous to the reformation this place could boast of a rich priory of Cistercian nuns, but of the building not even a fragment or vestige is now to be discovered. General Monk resided at Coldstream at the critical period when he awaited a favourable opportunity to advance into England, make a decisive impression by the presence of his army, and at once effect the restoration. During the winter of 1659-60 he raised here a regiment, which was therefore, and has ever since been, denominated 'the Coldstream guards.' The weekly market is held on Thursday, and there is one for cattle on the last Thursday of every month; fairs, the Thursday before the 12th November, and the Thursday before the 30th July.

The village of ECCLES is nearly six miles from Coldstream, in a highly cultivated parish of its name; the latter extending nearly eight miles in length by six in breadth, lying to the west of Coldstream, and bordering the river Tweed. The surface of the country is in general level, the soil is rich, and the grounds are well inclosed. There was once a nunnery of great magnitude and repute in the parish; this religious edifice, however, has shared the fate of the one that existed at Coldstream. The farm of 'Deadriggs,' in this district, was formerly the scene of a desperate battle; and a stone, which rises nine feet above the surface of the ground, is said to mark the grave of the Percies who fell in the contest.

CRANSHAWS, ABBEY ST. BATHANS, BUNKLE

WITH PRESTON AND LONGFORMACUS.

CRANSHAWS is a small parish, lying amongst the Lammermoor hills, and intersected by the parish of Longformacus; it is about 30 miles E. by S. from Edinburgh, 15 S. E. from Haddington, and about 7½ N. W. from Dunse. The old castle of Cranshaws is an edifice of great strength, and still entire. The remains of many encampments shew, what both traditionary and historical records testify, that this part of the country has been the scene of much bloodshed and strife.

The parish of ABBAY ST. BATHANS, seven miles from Dunse, is also situate in the midst of the Lammermoor hills. The soil is light and dry, and on the banks of the Whiteadder fertile and well cultivated; but the hilly district is barren, and covered with heath. The remains of an ancient abbey of Bernardines, founded in 1170, and dedicated to St. Bathans, by one of the Countesses of March, form the only object of interest or curiosity in the parish.

BUNKLE (or Bonkle) and PRESTON is a united parish, forming a square of nearly six miles. The soil on the high lands, towards the Lammermoor hills, is thin, dry, and poor; but, by the application of lime and marl, it has been much improved. The rest of the parish, particularly on the banks of the Whiteadder, is a fertile loam. During the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, the lands in the parish of Bonhill (then so called) were in the possession of a family of the same name: in the wars of the Bruce, Sir Alexander de Bonhill is frequently noticed; one of his female descendants marrying Sir John Stewart, had a son, who was created Earl of Angus in 1329; this title, in 1377, merged in the family of Douglas—and they, in addition to the title of Earls of Angus, are sometimes called Lords of Bonhill.

The parish of LONGFORMACUS, about seven miles from Dunse, is of a most irregular figure, but generally estimated at twelve miles in length by six in breadth; it lies in the Lammermoor district—is hilly, and for the most part pastoral; but the low grounds are well cultivated. With the exception of two strikingly fine conical hills, called ‘Dirrington-Laws,’ the parish does not possess any localities of attraction or interest.

DUNSE,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF EIDROM, ALLANTON AND GAVINTON.

DUNSE is a burgh of barony, and the largest town (Berwick excepted) in the shire; it is 44 miles E. by S. from Edinburgh, 15 W. from Berwick, 11 from Ayton, and 8 N. E. from Greenlaw; situate nearly in the centre of the county, on a fine plain, under the southern skirts of Dunse-Law, upon which beautiful hill, before the town was burned down, it formerly stood. Its present position, at the head of a plain twenty-five miles long, encompassed on three sides by the Lammermoor ridge, the river Whiteadder running by it, is both beautiful and grand. Dunse is a place of high antiquity; but, from its situation near the border, it was frequently destroyed by the English, before the succession of James to the throne of Elizabeth, on one of those occasions the town records were burned, so that no authentic account of its origin or early history has been transmitted to later ages. The houses are generally well built, and the suburbs are adorned with many elegant villas. Dunse Castle is a splendid modern mansion, in the castellated style, standing about half a mile to the north of the town: the ancient edifice was the strong hold of Randolph, Earl of Moray, the nephew and co-patriot of Bruce; it is now the seat of William Hay, Esq.: the interior decorations of the house, and the paintings with which it is embellished, render it one of the finest residences in this district of Scotland. The town is governed by a baillie, appointed by Mr. Hay, who is the superior of it; and the feuars manage other affairs by a council of nine. A justice of peace court, for the recovery of small debts, is held on the first Monday of every month. The town-house, a fine Gothic building, stands in the centre of the market-place; it was originally founded by the Earl of Moray before mentioned, and the present edifice was erected in 1816. Though it cannot be styled a manufacturing town, Dunse derives considerable advantage in the shape of weaving for Glasgow houses, the business of which is transacted by agents here: among the other principal sections of trade may be enumerated breweries, two paper and several corn mills in the neighbourhood, and a rope-walk. There are two good Inns—the ‘Black Bull,’ in the street of its name, and the ‘White Swan,’ in the Market-place; also two branch-bank establishments, and a bank for savings. A masonic lodge, Sunday and parochial schools, and some charitable institutions, are well supported.

The places of worship are the parish church, two congregations of the united secession body, and a relief chapel; Mr. Hay is the patron of the church, which was erected in 1790. The learned and celebrated metaphysician and theologian, Joannes Duns Scotus, was born here in 1274, and died at Cologne in 1308. The Rev. Thomas Boston, author of the ‘Fourfold State,’ and other works—Abraham Robertson, LL.D., professor of astronomy at Oxford—and Thos. M. Crie, D.D. in Edinburgh, were likewise born here. The weekly market is held on Wednesday: there are three great fairs for cattle and horses, viz., on the first Tuesday in June, the 26th of August, and the 17th of November; and four fairs for sheep, viz., on the fourth Wednesday in March, third Wednesday in May, second Wednesday in July, and fourth Wednesday in September.

EDROM is a village in the parish of its name, about three miles and a half east from Dunse; situate near the road leading from that town to Chirnside, and on the banks of the Whiteadder, on which, at Chirnside-bridge, there is a paper-mill in operation. The parish of Edrom, which is ten miles in length by six in breadth, is watered by the Blackadder and Whiteadder streams; and the celebrated mineral spring, Dunse Spa, is on the borders of this parish. Much of the soil is fertile, and produces excellent corn; but towards the hills it is moorish and shallow. At ALLANTON, a delightful little rural village in this parish, the two rivers above-mentioned unite.

GAVINTON is a village in the parish of Langton, situate two miles from Dunse, and half a mile south of the site of the old village of Langton, which has entirely disappeared. The present village, which is neat and regular in its form, obtained its name from Mr. Gavin, the late proprietor of the estate of Langton, which includes nearly the whole parish; it now belongs to his daughter and heiress, who married the first Marquess of Breadalbane in 1793. Formerly the proprietor of Langton occupied a castle in Langton wood; but for the last hundred years the family have resided at the mansion here, Langton House. In a small chapel in Langton wood, between the years 1670 and 1689, the presbyterians used to assemble for worship; and it was in this humble and secluded temple that Veitch, and some other eminent divines, occasionally preached. After the latter period it was used for a short time by the episcopalians, after which it fell to decay, and not a trace of the building now remains.

EARLSTOUN, LEGERWOOD, MERTOUN, NENTHORN,

AND STICHEL WITH HUME.

EARLSTOUN (anciently Ercildoum) is a village in the parish of its name; 31 miles s.e. from Edinburgh, 11 w. by n. from Kelso, 18 s.w. from Dunse, 15 n. from Jedburgh, 10 s.w. from Greenlaw, 6½ n. e. from Galashiels, and 6 s. from Lauder. The situation of this village is at once rare and beautiful, being seated in a rich valley encompassed by hills of a moderate height, which are interspersed by thriving plantations, and in a state of high cultivation; the Leader river flows on the west of the parish, and the Eden on the east. Upwards of one hundred looms were formerly employed at this place by the Glasgow manufacturers; the few now in operation are worked by Messrs. Marian, Whale and Co., gingham and muslin manufacturers. A justice of peace court is held here on the first Tuesday of every month. Part of the tower which was the residence of Sir Thomas Learmont (commonly called 'the Rhymer'), who flourished in the thirteenth century, is still standing; a stone in the wall of the church bears this inscription, in ancient characters—'Auld Rhymer's race lies in this place.' The seat of Dr. Jas. Home, of Cowden-knows, stands on the side of a hill; it is an ancient building, and the locality is famous in Scottish song. When the Highland army, under Prince Charles, passed through this part of the country on their way to Kelso, a claymore was left at Faus, which is now in the possession of Mr. Riddell, surgeon, of this place. There are two annual fairs, the 29th of June and third Thursday in October, for cattle. LEGERWOOD parish extends three miles in length by two and a half broad. Its elevated surface is well cultivated, being occupied by opulent and practically skilful farmers; and is adapted, in general, both for crops and pasture. The village of Legerwood is three miles from Earlston, situate on a cross road off the thoroughfare through Lauderdale. Bounhill, in this parish, was a signal station during the late war.

MERTOUN parish stretches about six miles along the north bank of the Tweed, with a breadth of nearly three miles; the whole is inclosed, and in a fine state of cultivation. The parish church stands near the Tweed, about five miles from Earlston.

NENTHORN, in this county, and bordering on Roxburghshire, is a parish four miles in length and nearly as much in breadth. The soil throughout is generally good, and its skillful culture is apparent.

STICHEL and HUME are two parishes united—the former in Roxburghshire, the latter in Berwickshire. The remains of Hume castle, noted during the contentions on the borders, stand in this parish; they command an extensive prospect over almost the whole of the Merse and Roxburghshire. The village of Stichel is situate about four miles north from the town of Kelso; Hume village stands three miles south from Greenlaw, and the like distance north from Stichel. There is nothing peculiarly attractive in this district as respects objects of curiosity, but their are some fine mansions with their pleasure grounds and plantations.

EYEMOUTH, AYTON AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

EYEMOUTH is an ancient little sea-port, burgh of barony, and market town, in the parish of its name; 50 miles E. from Edinburgh, 21 N. E. from Greenlaw, the like distance S. E. from Dunbar, 20 N. from Cold stream, 13½ N. E. from Dunse, and 8 N. from Berwick; situate at the mouth of the Eye, where that river discharges its waters into the North Sea, from which circumstance the town and parish takes its name. It is a very ancient port, being known as such so early as the reign of Alexander II, when it was resorted to by the monks of that age, as a commodious harbour for importing supplies for their establishment, and for shipping wool, hides, &c., in which they trafficked. Shipping can work into and out of the bay at all times of the tide, or lie at anchor in the haven, secure from all winds except the north and north-east, or when the passage cannot be effected by the Frith of Forth. Since the erection of the harbour, which took place shortly after the union, the trade of the place has been pretty considerable; corn and meal have been exported to the amount of 20,000 bolls annually, and in some years more than double that quantity; the herring fishery, also, is a source of profitable employment to the inhabitants, and the port is much frequented by wind-bound vessels. Eyemouth was a great depot for smugglers, it is affirmed that at one time almost every house had secret cellars connected with it, wherein those engaged in the illicit trade concealed the goods and liquors landed here from the luggers which frequented the harbour and neighbouring shores. The vigilance and energy of the pre-entive service, together with the judicious alteration of the duties, have, however, long destroyed this illegitimate mode of acquiring wealth, and turned the trade of the town into more honourable and less hazardous channels. On a small promontory, which stretches out into the sea, there are the remains of a regular fortification, supposed to have been constructed by a French officer entrusted with the command of the Queen Regent's troops.

There are two places of worship of the establishment: the parish church, in the town, which has been lately repaired, and a handsome steeple added; and a new church, recently erected at Houndwood, in connexion with the parochial one. The St. Abb's Lodge of Master Masons, and the Land o' Cakes Royal Arch Chapter, hold their meetings here, in a neat lodge-room, formed in 1757; it was in this room that Burns the poet was initiated in masonry. A weekly corn-market, which was established in 1832, is held on Thursday; it is well attended, and the principal portion of the grain produced in this part of the district is brought hither for sale. Two annual fairs are held, viz., on the last Thursday of June and the first Thursday of October.

The village of AYTON is two miles and a half from Eyemouth, and eight n. w. of Berwick; occupying a delightful situation on the left bank of the Eye, on the high road leading from the northern capital to Newcastle and other parts south. About a mile from the village, at Millbank, are extensive paper-mills, worked by Mr. E. Martin. In the village is a church of the establishment, and a united secession chapel. The parish describes an area of about four miles each way, including about two miles of sea coast, which is here bold and rocky; more inland the soil is rich, producing all kinds of grain, the markets for which are Eyemouth and Berwick. Several vestiges of encampments are discernible through the parish, and urns, with pieces of broken armour, have been occasionally brought to the surface by the plough. A fair is held 12th October.

FOULDEN, a village and burgh of barony, is 52 miles E. by S. of Edinburgh, 10 E. of Dunse, and 5 n.w. of Berwick; pleasantly situate on the north side of the Whiteadder river, which is here confined between steep banks. The parish, which lies in the eastern part of the Merse district, is two miles and a half in length by two in breadth; bounded by Ayton on the north, and Hutton on the south. John Wilkie, Esq. is superior of the burgh.

The parish of MORDINGTON lies in the south-eastern corner of the county, and the kirk is about one mile from Foulden. It was in the mansion-house of Mor-dington that Cronwell, when he passed the Tweed for the first time, established his quarters. It has been erroneously asserted that the Princess Margaret was married to James IV in Lamberton church (now in ruins), in this parish. At the boundary of the parish with the liberties of Berwick is the toll-bar and hamlet of Lamberton; and at this place (within the Scottish border), marriages are solemnized in the same summary manner, and on precisely the same principle, as

GREENLAW AND GORDON.

GREENLAW, a burgh of barony and the county town of Berwickshire, is 37 miles s. E. of Edinburgh, 20 w. of Berwick, 12 E. of Lauder,  $\frac{1}{2}$  s. w. of Dunse, and 10 n. w. of Coldstream; situate in a valley on the north bank of the Blackadder, over which there are two bridges; it consists of one long street, with a square market-place receding from the south side. After Berwick was taken by the English, the sheriff and county courts were transferred, first to Old Greenlaw (which was one mile to the south, but of which no vestiges remain), and subsequently to the present town, where they have been held ever since, except for a short time during the turbulent reign of Charles I, when they held their sittings at Dunse. Being seated near the centre of the shire, Greenlaw was by royal charter in 1596, and by act of parliament in 1696, ordained the head burgh of the county; it is governed by a baron bailie. The sheriff court and quarter sessions are held on the first Tuesday in February, May, August, and November; and there is a small debt court on the second Tuesday of each month. The old caol and post-house, which stood in the church-yard, have been superseded by the present strong and handsome prison and elegant county buildings, erected in 1831 at the sole expense of, and presented to the shire by, the late Sir W. P. H. Campbell. Besides the established church, there are places of worship for original burghers and united secession congregations. There is a cattle-fair on the 22d of May, and another on the last Thursday in October.

GORDON village is four miles from Greenlaw, on the road from Edinburgh to Kelso. The river Eden intersects the parish, which extends seven miles in length by from two to four in breadth. At Castles, where some ruins still remain, resided, as is believed, the ancestors of the present Duke of Gordon; and Huntly and Huntlywood, the names of two farms in the parish, claim the honour of giving the title of Marquess of Huntly to his Grace's eldest son. Greenknow tower, a venerable structure (now the property of George Fairholm, Esq.), was frequently bad recourse to as a place of refuge by the inhabitants, who fled thither when suddenly surprised by the incursions of the English, prior to the union between the two kingdoms.

HUTTON AND PAXTON

ARE two small, pleasant and rural villages in the parish of Hutton, and the district of Merse, lying to the west of Berwick bounds, from which the parish is divided by the river Whiteadder. Hutton, the Kirk Town, is situate about seven miles from Berwick, in the northern part of the parish; and Paxton in the eastern quarter. The latter village is understood to have formed the locality of the song entitled 'Robin Adair.' The beautiful Tweed, which bounds Hutton parish on the south, is crossed by an elegant suspension bridge, called the Union-bridge, protruding from a point near Paxton to a place a little way below Horn-cliff, a village in the county of Durham; it forms the only connexion of the two sides of the river between Coldstream and Berwick, from which last-named town it is frequently visited by parties of pleasure; it admits two carriages abreast, and has been of great service in facilitating the introduction of coal and lime into Berwickshire. A handsome new church was opened for divine service, for the first time, in April, 1835. The late Rev. P. Redpath, the erudite translator of Bœthius, was minister of this parish. The master of the parochial school (in 1791), at the age of 25 years, had attained the extraordinary height of 7 feet 5 inches.

LAUDER,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF CHANNELKIRK AND UGSTON.

LAUDER is an ancient royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, and the capital of the parish of its name, as it is of the district of Lauderdale; 25 miles s. e. of Edinburgh, 35 w. of Berwick, 21 n. of Jedburgh, the like distance s. w. of Coldstream, 20 s. w. of Dunse, 17 n. w. of Kelso, 12 w. of Greenlaw, and 7 n. of Earlstoun; situate in the vale of the Leader, on the main road from Edinburgh to Kelso. It consists principally of a line of houses on each side of the thoroughfare, with an additional street about the centre, at the west end of which is the town-house. The buildings are plain, and of irregular construction; and the town is destitute of any edifice that can lay claim to particular notice. Its trade is of a local and domestic nature, and manufactures have not as yet imparted their benefits to this part of the district; a branch of the Edinburgh bank of Scotland is, perhaps, the principal establishment connected with the trade of the place. The charter constituting Lauder a royal burgh was renewed in 1502, and the government vested in two bailies and fifteen councillors, chosen annually from amongst the freemen of the burgh. By the reform act it is joined with Haddington, Dunbar, North Berwick and Jedburgh in returning one member to parliament. The places of worship are the parish church, and united secession and relief chapels. The church, which stands to the south of the town-house, was erected in 1673, when the Duke of Lauderdale removed the more ancient church from the vicinity of his residence; the edifice, though cruciform, is not remarkable for elegance. The most conspicuous object in and about Lauder is Thirstane castle, a stupendous and spacious mansion, surrounded by a park and some fine wood, and is the seat of the family of Lauderdale; the house, which stands between the Leader and the town, on a fine lawn, is fitted up in the best taste of the time of Charles II, and decorated with massive balustrades and cornices, and a profusion of elaborately carved marble chimney-pieces; among the paintings, chiefly portraits, are some rare and valuable productions. Fairs are held on the third Friday of June, and fourth Friday of July, for cattle; and on the first Tuesday of March, and the fourth Friday of October, for general goods and the hiring of servants.

The parish of CHANNELKIRK is situate among the Lammermoor hills, where they divide the counties of Edinburgh and Haddington from Berwickshire, and the London road passes through it. On the banks of the rivulets, which, united, form the river Leader (or Lauder), are about two thousand acres in tillage; but the hills are mostly covered with heath, and are very bleak and unproductive. The small village of Channelkirk, which is situate about four miles from Lauder, is the first inhabited place that the traveller meets after issuing from the Lammermoor ridge; and descending southward into the vale of the Leader, about one mile distant, he arrives at UGSTON, the most considerable village in the parish, and where the little trade or business, that has existence throughout its entire extent, is almost exclusively centered.

POLWARTH AND FOGGO.

POLWARTH, an ancient and now almost decayed village, is in the parish of its name and district of Merse; 40 miles from Edinburgh, four from Dunse, and about three and a half from Greenlaw—situate on the road between the two last-named towns. It was formerly of much greater extent, and, from its connexion with Scottish song, continues to the present day the most interesting locality in the district. On the green of Polwarth, in the centre of the village, it was the custom for every new-married pair, with their company, to dance round an ancient thorn. The legend connected with this tree (according to Chambers), might furnish materials for a good romance. The estate of Polwarth formerly belonged to Sinclair, of Hermandston, whose family, so far back as the fifteenth century, terminated in co-heiresses. It appears that the Misses Sinclair, of all their suitors, and they had many, preferred the sons of their powerful neighbour, Home of Wedderburn, and it so happened, that the youngest sister was beloved by the eldest Home (George), while the eldest placed her affections on the youngest, whose name was Patrick. After the death of the father of the young ladies, they fell into the hands of an uncle, who, anxious to prevent their marriages, that he himself might become their heir, imprisoned them in his castle, somewhere in Lothian. In this dilemma, the fair prisoners contrived to get a letter transmitted to their lovers, by means of an old female beggar, and they were soon gratified with the sight of the two youths, accompanied by a determined band of Merse men, before the gate of their prison: the uncle made both remonstrance and resistance, but in vain; his nieces were forcibly taken from him and carried off in triumph. Part of the nuptial rejoicings (for the marriage ceremony immediately ensued), consisted in a merry dance round the thorn, which even at that early period, grew in the centre of the village. The lands of Polwarth were then divided between the two Homes; and while George carried on the line of the Wedderburn family, Patrick was the founder of the branch afterwards ennobled by the title of Marchmont. In commemoration of this remarkable affair, all future marriage parties danced round the thorn: and a tune seems to have been composed, of the name of 'Polwarth on the Green,' to which songs have been successively adapted. On the front of the church, which stands about a mile east of the village, is a Latin inscription, importing that it was erected anterior to the year 900. In the vault of this church Sir Patrick Home, of Polwarth, afterwards the first Earl of Marchmont and Lord Chancellor of Scotland, found an asylum from the fury of his persecutors, when a price was set upon his head, till arrangements were made for his escape to Holland, which he happily effected. The noble mansion of the late Earl of Marchmont, together with the estate, is now the property of Sir H. P. H. Campbell, Bart., M. P.

The parish of Foggo, which lies to the south of that of Polwarth, is intersected and watered by the Blackadder, upon the right bank of which stream (said to be so fatal to the salmon species) stands the little village of Foggo; and about a mile further up the river is the ancient diminutive hamlet of Chesters, reposing on the site of a Roman encampment. The parish is six miles in length by between three and four in breadth; the land chiefly arable, and fertile.

SWINTON, WHITSOME AND LADY-KIRK.

THE parish of SWINTON, to which that of SIMPRIN was united in 1761, is in the district of Merse. The parish is intersected by the small river Leet, and near thereto is the neat village of Swinton, lying about 45 miles s. e. of Edinburgh, 12 s. w. of Berwick, and 6 n. of Coldstream. The small village of SIMPRIN is situate at the south-east corner of the parish. The estate of Swinton has been, for upwards of seven hundred and fifty years, the property of a family of that name, who originally acquired it as a reward for clearing the country of wild boars (or swine), whose mischievous and often ferocious depredations continually troubled and alarmed the inhabitants; the grant was afterwards confirmed by the royal ordinance of Malcolm Canmore, for the exertions of the Swintons in reinstating him on the throne. The celebrated Mr. Thos. Boston, author of the 'Fourfold State,' was for some time minister of Simprin. There are two annual fairs; one is held on the third Thursday in June, and the other on the fourth Tuesday in October.

WHITSOME (including the abrogated parish of Hill-ton), is about four miles and a half long, and two and a half broad. The land under cultivation is principally composed of a deep rich clay, but there is some extent of marsh or nozey ground. The small village of Whitsome is situate nearly in the centre of the parish, at the distance of about three miles from Swinton.

The parish of LADY-KIRK lies on the north bank of the Tweed, having the parish of Hutton on the north-east, and Whitsome and Swinton joining it on the west side; it extends about three miles along the margin of the river, with a breadth of from one to two. The church of Lady-Kirk stands near the Tweed, at the distance of about three miles from Swinton and nine from Berwick. Tradition ascribes its erection to the fourth James, in gratitude for his preservation from the violence of the flood, when fording the river here at the head of his army; he dedicated the edifice to 'Our Lady,' hence denominated Lady-Kirk, which name was subsequently extended to the whole parish, previously designated Upsellington. The soil of the district is naturally good from its local situation; cultivation has made it rich and beautiful, and it is celebrated for the breed of cattle and sheep.

BUTESHIRE.

THE Islands of Bute, Arran, Great and Little Cumbray (or Cumbræ), and Inch-Marnoch, compose this county, which comprises 161 square miles of land, four square miles of lake, and, by a recent calculation, about 30,000 acres of cultivated and upwards of 70,000 of uncultivated ground. Though far separated from the properly denominated Western Islands, those of Bute statistically constitute a portion of the Hebrides. The northern extremity of Bute projects into the district of Cowal, Argyshire; and the water division between the island and the latter is often so slender that vessels find a difficulty in navigating the straits, which have obtained the title of 'the Kyles of Bute.' The southern part forms the western shore of the Firth of Clyde. About the middle it is narrowed by the indentation of bays on either side. The length of the island is eighteen miles, and its breadth averages five. Towards Cowal it is bleak and mountainous; but on the southern parts it consists of green fertile eminences or low hills, either affording excellent pasture, or capable, with the low grounds, of being cultivated so as to produce fine crops of barley, oats, &c. The island altogether is distinguished for picturesque beauty and salubrity of climate. Here, as on all the west coast of Scotland, there is little or no extent of sea-beach, in comparison with other shores; the marine border is in most places rocky, with several good natural harbours. On the south-eastern side, the island is clothed with fine plantations, raised by the taste of the Marquess of Bute, whose seat, Mount Stewart, an elegant modern mansion, lies on the woody slope facing the entrance to the Clyde. In the interior, in a secluded situation, the late celebrated tragedian, Kean, erected a cottage, to which he purposed retiring from the world. The view of the island from the sea is enlivened by several other cottages on the different green declivities. Bute has for many years been the place of summer resort, for sea-bathing and ruralization, of the fashionable mercantile gentry of the west, who congregate chiefly in and about Rothesay, its capital, and contribute materially to the vivacity of the place.

The large Island of ARRAN lies to the southward of Bute, and between the peninsula of Cantyre and Ayrshire; in form it approaches an oval, extending from north to south nearly twenty-four miles, and in breadth about fourteen. While Bute is mostly low and green, Arran is lofty and brown, with many heathy mountains, some of which exceed three thousand feet in altitude; a small portion of the lower grounds is cultivated, but the whole island is essentially and characteristically pastoral. There are several remarkable caves; the most distinguished is that on the west, opposite to Campbeltown, called 'the King's cave,' from its having afforded shelter to Robert Bruce before he discomfited Baliol and ascended the throne of Scotland: it is one hundred and twenty feet in length, sixty in height, and forty-eight in width. Arran belongs principally to the Duke of Hamilton, who has on the island an ancient though somewhat modernized seat, called Brodiek castle; it furnished the title of Earl to the chief of the house of Hamilton, who was regent during the minority of Mary Queen of Scots. The island comprehends two parishes, and its villages are Lamhass and Brodiek. It is particularly famous for the excellence of its whisky; and coal, freestone and ironstone are said to lie beneath the surface of the soil. The beautiful little island of INCH-MARNOCH, rising a few miles south-west of Bute, is about a mile in length; near its eastern shore are the ruins of a chapel dedicated to St. Marnoch. The CUMBRAYS are two small islands, lying in the Firth of Clyde, betwixt the isle of Bute and Ayrshire: the greater Cumbray lies highest up the Firth, and is two miles and a half in length by a breadth of one and a half, distant from the coast of Ayrshire about two miles. The capital and the only town on the island is Milnport, a neat little place on the north side, with a harbour. The island forms a parish, to which the lesser Cumbray is attached; this latter island is about a mile in length by half a mile in breadth. These Cumbrays once belonged to the Norwegians, and were frequently the object of contest with the Scots. Two-thirds of the larger Cumbray belongs to the Earl of Glasgow, and the remainder is the property of the Marquess of Bute; the Earl of Eglintoun is the owner of the lesser Cumbray.

The island of Bute at one period contained ten or twelve parish churches, and about thirty hermitages of religious men; the island has now but two parishes, and the shire altogether only five. The only royal burgh is Rothesay; the county is represented in parliament by one member. Bute gives the title of Marquess to a family of the name of Stewart, a branch of the royal family of Scotland. The Marquess of Bute is descended in a direct line from Sir John Stewart, a son of Robert II, who by his father's grant became possessed of the island of Bute, with the heritable jurisdiction of the county, in which he was confirmed by a charter of his brother, Robert III. The family was elevated to an Earldom in the person of Sir James, a privy councillor of Queen Anne, in the year 1703. The present Marquess is lord lieutenant and high sheriff of Buteshire, and is admiral of the county by virtue of a commission from the King, being in no way dependent on the lord high admiral of Scotland.

THE ISLE OF ARRAN,

INCLUDING THE PARISHES OF KILBRIDE BRODICK AND LAMLASH,

AND KILMORY, AND THE VILLAGES OF WITH THEIR VICINITIES.

THE Isle of Arran has been partially described under the head of Buteshire, to which county it belongs. It is divided into two parishes, KILBRIDE and KILMORY, and its villages are Lamlass and Brodick. Kilbride parish occupies about one half of the island, on the east side extending eighteen miles in length, by a breadth of from four to six. This parish, and others of the same name, are said to have derived their designation from St. Bride or Bridget; and the fame of this sainted female seems to have been extended over the whole of Britain. The ruins of the old church of Kilbride are still remaining. The present edifice, which is situate in Lamlass, was erected in 1774. The anchorage in the bay of this village is reckoned the best in the west of Scotland, affording perfect security to vessels driven by stress of weather from the Irish channel. The haven forms a natural basin, with the high protecting rocky isle of Holy Island lying at its mouth. On the inner side of the bay is the village, where there is a good inn. In this parish are some tall obelisks, which are supposed to be fragments of Druidical circles or places of worship. The Duke of Hamilton is superior of the island; he munificently contributes a sum annually towards the repairs of the two packets on this station, as likewise for the support of a surgeon for the necessitous sick of the island. A justice of peace court is held on the first Monday of every month, for the recovery of small debts, and the punishment of misdemeanors and other petty offences.

The parish of KILMORY occupies about half the island of Arran, on its western side, and the kirk of Kilmory is situate at its southern extremity. Arran Castle, the seat of the Duke of Hamilton, is placed on a rocky bank, which rises from the north side of the bay of Brodick. The bank forms part of a peninsular elevation or shoulder, projected from the base of Goatfield (or Goatfell) mountain, which eminence rises nearly three thousand feet above the level of the sea, and overlooks the three kingdoms. Brodick village contains a good inn. The island is noted for its station as a herring fishery; in a good season the value of the fish taken amounts to several thousand pounds, and a great number of the inhabitants are supported from this source of industry, whilst others are occupiers of small plots of land, in the cultivation of which they obtain subsistence. The climate of the island is considered highly salubrious, and the longevity of the people is remarkable. A fair is held in Lamlass on Lammas, old style; and at Brodick on the first Wednesday after the 20th of June; and another for horses in the month of January.

MILPORT (ISLE OF CUMBRAY).

THE Isles of CUMBRAY (or Cumbræ) have been already noticed at a preceding page, in the description of Buteshire. MILPORT is a small but improving sea-bathing village, charmingly situate on the south side of the greater Cumbray, about four miles from Largs, in Ayrshire; with which town a communication is maintained by means of a regular ferry boat, ready at any hour; while for the steam packets plying between this town and Ardrossan, Ayr, Greenock, and Glasgow, the excellent harbour and new pier here present perfect convenience for the landing or embarkation of passengers. Seventy years ago this place possessed only one dwelling—the hut of a fisherman. The number of inhabitants in the two

Cumbrays amount, at the present time, to about one thousand, of whom a considerable proportion are resident in Milport; and in the summer months, from the influx of visitors, a life and bustle is exhibited which forms an agreeable contrast to the quietude prevailing in other parts of the isles. The principal object of attention is a beautiful marine pavilion in the pointed style of architecture, belonging to the Earl of Glasgow, who is proprietor of nearly two-thirds of the isle, the remainder belonging to the Marquess of Bute. A new parish church is now erecting, which is intended to accommodate 800 persons. A baptist chapel, a bank for savings, and a parochial school are in the village; the latter, is a peculiarly neat structure of the kind. The inhabitants of these isles are a class remarkable for their industrious habits—they are chiefly fishermen, owners of their own boats, and many of them are likewise weavers, who ply at the loom the whole day, and at night betake themselves to the waters, as an additional means of subsistence. Some parts of the greater Cumbray are well cultivated, producing good wheat, and here and there may be seen some thriving plantations. On the western side of the lesser Cumbray is a light-house. This isle is the property of the Earl of Eglinton.

ROTHESAY, PORT BANNATYNE & NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ROTHESAY is a royal burgh, a town of great antiquity, and the capital of the parish of its name; 96 miles w. of Edinburgh (by Mid-Caldar), 40 s. w. of Glasgow, 23 from Lamlash, in the Isle of Arran, 12 from the Cumbrays, and 9 from Largs; finely situate at the head of a bay, called Rothesay, on the east side of the island of Bute, of which it is the capital, as well as of the shire. The origin of Rothesay was its castle, whose ruins yet exist; but when or by whom it was founded has been a question which to the present time remains unanswered; conjecture, however, assigns to it the date of the end of the eleventh or beginning of the twelfth century: what the vicissitudes of centuries have spared of this structure stands near the centre of the town. The best account of this castle is to be found in a pamphlet written by Mr. John Mackinlay, published in Glasgow in 1818; the following are considered as some of the most remarkable particulars respecting it:—The first mention of it in history is in 1228, when it was besieged by Husbac, the Norwegian, in conjunction with Olave, King of Man, and taken after a stout resistance; having been recovered from the northern invaders, it was again taken by them about the year 1263, and retaken by the Scots shortly after the battle of Largs. It was seized by the English during the reign of John Baliol, but in 1311 it surrendered to Robert Bruce; in 1334, Edward Baliol took the castle, and fortified it; it soon afterwards, however, submitted to Bruce, the steward of Scotland. King Robert II visited this castle in 1376 and in 1381; he again visited it in 1392, and subsequently created his eldest son, Prince David, Duke of Rothesay, which has ever since been the principal Scottish title of the heir apparent. Above a century ago Rothesay fell lamentably into decay, and continued in that depressed state till about the year 1760, when a herring fishery was established, and carried on for many years with great success, in consequence of which the dilapidated houses were rebuilt, and several new streets were in succession added; but the fishery has not, for a considerable period, been so productive as formerly. A considerable cotton factory was established about the year 1780, which now gives employment to upwards of four hundred persons; a manufactory for weaving by power-looms has also been erected. There are three highly respectable banking establishments, and one for savings; several well-conducted libraries, and news and reading rooms. The town has long been one of the most fashionable watering-places in Scotland, and few towns equal it in the extent and comfort of the accommodation provided for the numerous visitors who resort hither for relaxation or the renovation of their health. The bay is very spacious, and the anchorage ground is excellent; the quay was greatly enlarged, and the harbour much improved and deepened, about ten years since, at a very considerable expense. On the north-east side of the entrance to the bay from the Frith of Clyde stands a fine and conspicuous light-house, the beacon of which is revolving and intermittent. The battery is situate a little beyond the end of Princess-street, on the shore of the east bay, and is mounted with several pieces of cannon. The town-hall and county buildings have been recently rebuilt, at an expense of upwards of £4,000., raised by assessments on the county and burgh, and by subscriptions; they form a truly handsome pile, and are ornamented with an elegant square tower, containing a bell, and beautiful clock, having two transparent dials, which at night are illuminated; the clock was the gift of the Marquess of Bute: the edifice comprises a spacious court-room, in which the sheriff, burgh and justice of peace courts are held, and the town and sheriff clerk's offices, with other requisite apartments. Rothesay was erected into a royal burgh by Robert III, under charter dated 12th January, 1400; and its privileges were confirmed and extended by James VI, in 1584. The government of the town is vested in a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, the town treasurer, and twelve councillors. The sheriff court is held on every Tuesday, and that for the burgh on Thursday during the session; a justice of peace court, for the recovery of small debts, sits on the first Monday in every month; the quarter sessions are held on the first Tuesdays in the months of March, May and August, and the last Tuesday in October; but all criminal cases, for the circuit court of justiciary, are tried at Inverary.

The places of worship comprise two spacious churches, which stand at the head of High-street; a new secession chapel, in Bridge-street; a reformed presbytery chapel, in High-street; one for independents, at Ardbeg, about a quarter of a mile east of the cross; and a new Gaelic church, in Old Vennel-street. The educational establishments consist of the parochial school, in Bishop-street; a school of industry for girls, recently erected; a society's school; and several seminaries of a higher class, both boarding & day.

In the neighbourhood of this respectable town there are many mansions of the nobility and gentry. About five miles south is Mount-Stewart, the seat of the Marquess of Bute; and in the same direction is Woodend, or (as it is more generally denominated) 'Kean's cottage,' from having been built by that eminent tragedian: the house, which is now the residence of Peter Newham, Esq., stands in a sweet retired spot, a little above the western shore of a fine fresh-water loch, whose waters are usefully employed in propelling the machinery of the Rothesay cotton-mills. Four miles to the north-east, on the opposite shore of the bay, in Argyleshire, is Castle Toward, a massive modern edifice, the property and residence of Kirkman Finlay, Esq. In the neighbourhood of Mount-Stewart an extensive vitrified fort has been discovered; and on the summit of a gentle eminence, called 'Chapel-hill,' rising above Argyle-street, are seen the remains of the ancient chapel of St. Bride. A nominal weekly market is held on Wednesday; and fairs on the first Wednesday of May, third Wednesday and following Thursday of July, and last Wednesday in October, all chiefly for cattle.

The village of PORT BANNATYNE is situate full two miles north of Rothesai; it possesses a small quay, and several well-furnished houses; the latter are occupied principally by families who make this pleasant village a summer retreat. Half a mile from it is the ancient castle of Kames, the family mansion of J. Hamilton, Esq., Convener of the county. Nearly a mile to the west is the new church of North Bute, erected in 1836, at an expense of £1,000, defrayed by the Marquess of Bute. The majority of the inhabitants are employed in fishing. The population of the village, in 1836, was about 300.

CAITHNESS-SHIRE.

THIS is the most northerly county of Great Britain, lying on the north-eastern extremity of Scotland. It is bounded by the German Ocean on the east, by Sutherlandshire on the south and south-west, and the Pentland Firth on the north separates the mainland from the Orkney Islands. In figure the county approaches to that of a triangle, and is nearly forty miles in length, and about twenty-five in breadth at the middle: altogether it comprehends 487 square miles of land, 10 square miles of lake, 92,333 acres of land cultivated, and 347,347 acres uncultivated. The early history of this county is of little or no interest, owing to its distance from the central part of the kingdom. It was anciently inhabited by the Catinii, from whom the present appellation is supposed to be derived. The names of various places and monumental remains indicate its having been the theatre of numerous petty exploits of the Danes and Norwegians. The ruins of Castle Sinclair and Gernego—the remains of old chapels, and other relics of antiquity—combine to prove that this district was inhabited at an early date.

SOIL, PRODUCE, CLIMATE, &c.—The county is in general level, with a few mountains on the borders of Sutherlandshire, and some eminences of trifling altitude throughout. The soil is almost entirely argillaceous heavy land, lying upon horizontal clay-slate, which in wet seasons keeps the water upon the surface. This district is nearly destitute of wood, and the few inclosures are but of a rude quality. Although improvements have certainly been effected, much remains to be done to raise the condition of Caithness-shire to that of the adjacent counties. Since the year 1809, a better system of farming has been introduced, and the number of roads through the county has been augmented. Though black cattle form an article of consideration, this is rather an agricultural than a grazing county: clover and turnips are pretty broadly cultivated; the crops of grain are mostly limited to oats and bear, both of good quality, and the yearly export amounts to many thousand bolls. Besides cattle and corn, kelp, salmon, cod, herrings, bacon, with some butter and cheese, and lately a considerable quantity of wool, comprise the articles of exportation. The mountains abound with red deer and various kinds of game; and throughout the district hares, rabbits, grouse, plover, and a bird called the snowflea, are in great plenty; the latter bird, about the size of a sparrow, is exceedingly fat and delicious. In the caverns along the coast, seals form their harbours: the hunters enter in small boats with torches, and with loud shouts alarm the animals, whom they kill with clubs as they attempt to pass into the sea. The county has no coal, and the principal fuel of the inhabitants is peat; freestone and limestone abound in many parts. The CLIMATE, though by no means genial and mild, is temperate, considering its high latitude—the fifty-ninth degree—where the duration of the night, at one period of the year, is nineteen hours.

RIVERS, LAKES, &c.—In the interior there are upwards of thirty small fresh-water lakes, from which flow a number of streamlets, and some waters of greater magnitude: the principal among the latter are FORSS and THURSO rivers on the north-west, and WICK and BERRYDALE on the south-east. The most extensive loch is the Wattin, a fine sheet of water, about three miles in length, from which issues a branch of the river Wick. The only bays of any note are Sinclair Bay on the north-east, and Cannes Bay on the north.

Caithness-shire was anciently a bishopric, the earliest traces of which refer its origin to the twelfth century; at present it contains ten parishes, which constitute a presbytery. The shire contains one royal burgh—WICK, and a burgh of barony—THURSO: the COUNTY sends one member to parliament; and WICK, joined with Kirkwall, Dornoch, Dingwall, Tain, and Cromarty, elects another representative. Caithness gives the title of Earl to the family of Sinclair.—The greatest elevations in this county, above the level of the sea, are—Maiden Paps, 2,000; Scarry Hills, 1,876; and Ord of Caithness, 1,250 feet.

LYBSTER, LATHERON AND SWINEY.

LYBSTER is a village in the parish of Latheron, 13 miles s. of Wick and 21 n. of Helmsdale, situate on the south-east side of the county; the parish extends from the Ord of Caithness twenty-seven miles along the coast, by a breadth of from thirteen to fifteen miles. The village of Lybster, which has lately sprung up on a mere waste, is regularly laid out, and consists of respectable and substantially-built houses. A church is in progress of erection; and its harbour, which in ancient times was a place of note, is about to be restored. No port from Cromarty to the Orkney Isles has greater claims on the attention of the mariner, nor has any been more successfully and beneficially employed for the purpose of the herring fishery, though its advantages are as yet but imperfectly developed. From the indentation of its coast, with bold headlands at either side, which throw off the sweeping currents so general on the Caithness shores, there is comparatively still water at the entrance, and perfect security within the harbour. The proprietor, availing himself of a considerable water-power, has erected mills; he has also constructed a firm effective stone pier, three hundred feet in length, within which there is a depth of sixteen feet of water at ordinary spring tides; there are facilities for materially augmenting this depth—the bottom, consisting of loose stones and shingle, slopes rapidly outwards, and gives soundings of fourteen feet, at low water, within sixty feet of the head of the present quay. The 'Brothers' Port,' the name bequeathed to this haven by the Scandinavians, who settled in Caithness in the eighth and tenth centuries, appears to have been much resorted to by these 'sea-kings,' or pirates; but it was subsequently destroyed by a devastating land-flood, which choked up the small river that flows into it with trees (still extant), earth, moss and stone; and thus converted into a solid heath and corn-field what theretofore was capable of affording shelter and safety to the largest ships of the present day; however, from the progress already made in clearing out this obstruction, there can be no doubt that, at an incredibly small expense, the importance of this valuable harbour may be increased even beyond its ancient reputation: a proof of the disastrous occurrence just related is furnished by the fact that, but an inconsiderable time since, mooring ring-bolts were to be seen at a rock three hundred yards from the present high-water mark. Upon a contiguous eminence the ruins of a Roman catholic chapel, and some well-carved relics in Morayshire freestone, still survive the lapse of time. A good road intersects the parish along the shore, and on this road are some pretty villages, to which, however, no trade is attached but that of fishing. LATHERON kirk stands half way, on the coast, near to a road that crosses the country to Thurso. The village of SWINEY (or Swinnie) lies further northward along the coast. A cattle fair is held at Lybster on the 12th November; and a sort of market for engaging men for the arduous employment of the fishing season takes place on the 20th of July. The population of Lybster, as ascertained by a recent census, amounts to above 800.

THURSO AND THE VILLAGE OF CASTLETOWN.

THURSO is a town and burgh of barony, in the parish of its name, nearly 290 miles N. of Edinburgh, 20 N. W. from Wick, the like distance W. from John o' Groats, 46 E. of Tongue, and 96 miles from Bonar Bridge, by way of Tongue and the Western road. Thurso is situated on the north-west coast of the county, at the head of a spacious bay, in a secure valley, traversed by Thurso river, which falls into the Pentland Frith. Its original name, and what it is still called in the Gaelic language, is "Inverhorsa." Inver signifying the mouth of a river. It is said, and with probability, that the name is derived from Horsa, a Saxon general, who landed here in the fifth century. The Danes were the earliest possessors of Caitness. Torfeus, the Danish historian, mentions that, in the beginning of the eleventh century, Count Moddan quartered his army at Thurso, which he terms "The Town of Caitness," and that they were plentifully supplied with spoil from the neighbourhood, till subdued by Thorkel. He adds, that Moddan had his camp on the promontory of Thurso, where vestiges of a wall, which fortified it, may still be perceived. Dr. Barry states that Earl Erland, in the time of Malcolm II, king of Scotland, about the year 1005, resided for the most part at Thurso. Buchanan mentions many battles between Malcolm and the Danes, in Murray, which, in those times, comprehended Caitness and all the northern counties of Scotland. At the west side of the bay there is safe anchorage, in all weathers, for vessels of almost any burthen, the few losses which have happened being occasioned by the negligence of the mariners; it is, indeed, the only safe anchorage in the county, and its being so little known makes it less frequented. Its name is Scrahster Roads; and there are few places in Scotland more capable of having a capacious and excellent harbour, at a comparatively little expense, from whence a railroad might be made to the town, which is little more than a mile distant. The country along the banks of the river is tolerably fertile, which is noted for an almost incredible draught of salmon, on the 23d of July, 1743-4, when 2,560 ordinary sized fish were taken in one day. It has been let as high as £1000, but its present rental is £850. Vessels intending to enter the harbour must wait the tide before they can cross the bar, and there are small buoys, which mark the direction to be taken. The harbour, at spring tides, admits vessels drawing ten feet of water, and, after passing the bar, they are in perfect safety; but, for want of a pier, they cannot load or unload except at low water. There are eight vessels belonging to the town, six generally employed in the coasting trade, and two Leith traders, employing about fifty-six men, and measure about 770 tons register. It is calculated that fish is exported yearly to the amount of £10,000. For the convenience of trade there is a branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, and one of the Aberdeen Town and County Bank.

The town is irregularly built, and contains no edifices of particular note, except the parish church, POST OFFICE, Traill-street, THURSO, Donald M'Kay, Post Master.—Letters from all parts of the South arrive every morning at eight, and are despatched every forenoon at a quarter before eleven.—Letters from TONGREE arrive every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday afternoon at four, and are despatched every Monday, Wednesday and Friday morning at half-past eight.—Letters from CASTLETOWN arrive every afternoon at four, and are despatched every morning at half-past eight.

which has been recently built in the New Town—an elegant structure in the gothic style. Its tower rises about 140 feet, and contains an excellent clock, which was presented by Henry Miller, Esq. of London, to his native town of Thurso. The sheriff court has, within the last nine years, been removed to Wick, being the royal burgh, after it had been held in Thurso for the greater part of two centuries. Thurso is a burgh of barony, holden of Sir George Sinclair, as superior. The charter of erection was granted in 1633 by King Charles I. It is governed by a magistracy of two bailies and twelve councillors, elected by the superior, and retained in office during his pleasure.

The only places erected for worship besides those of the Establishment, are chapels for Original Seceders, and Independents. The town was originally regular, the paved streets of which appear, by digging, some feet below the present surface. Sand, blown from the shore in the course of ages, has covered the original thoroughfares. The sea has greatly encroached on the town, even within the last century. At low water moss appears intermixed with fragments of timber.

The parish of Thurso extends about three miles in all directions round the town, except on the north-west, where it is bounded by the sea; its figure is irregular, and it contains about 4,000 acres of arable land, besides waste. The sea coast in general is rocky, but the bay is of fine hard sand, sheltered, on the west, by Holburn Head, and on the east by Dunnet Head, from the tremendous waves of the Pentland frith. A little east of the town stands Thurso East, or Thurso Castle, the seat of Sir George Sinclair, which is a very superior ancient building, in good repair; and of late a large and elegant addition has been made to it. Thurso parish gave birth to Richard Oswald, Esq. one of the plenipotentiaries from the court of St. James, for settling the peace of 1783; it is also the birth place of Sir John Sinclair, of Ulster, whose name will be immortalized by the statistical account of Scotland, which was collected and published in consequence of his indefatigable exertions. The market is held on Friday, and the fairs on the second Tuesday in July, and the first Tuesday in September. The population of the town is estimated at about 2,500.

CASTLETOWN is a small neat village in the parish of Orick (or Odrig), situate rather more than 15 miles N. W. of Wick, and nearly 6 E. of Thurso. In the immediate vicinity of the village is the mansion of James Traill, Esq. upon whose estate is quarried an excellent kind of stone, adapted to the purposes of flooring, and flagging foot-ways, &c. It lies in beds of from one to three inches in thickness. Upon one occasion a block was raised three inches and a half thick, which, when split, presented a superficial admeasurement of nearly one hundred and seventy feet. The average exports of this article amount annually to about 200,000 superficial feet; and to facilitate the shipments, a small and convenient harbour has been formed.

Is a royal burgh in the parish of its name; 290 miles
 N. of Edinburgh (20 of which may be saved by crossing the ferry from Tain to Dornoch), 61 N. by E. of Dornoch, and 20 S.W. of Thurso; situate on the sea-coast, or bay of Wick, where the river of its name enters the North Sea: the stream, which springs from the high grounds of the parish of Latheron, is augmented in its course by two others—one issuing from the loch of Taftingall, and the other from the lochs of Wattin and Stempster. There is a salmon fishery on the river, which, however, is not very productive; but latterly
 it has improved greatly, and its produce is regularly shipped for the London market. Of late years the town has extended far beyond the bounds of the royalty, having on the north side acquired Louisburgh, and on the south the neat and remarkably thriving settlement of Pulteney Town, on the lands belonging to the British society for extending the fisheries and improving the sea-coasts of this kingdom. Until the addition of Pulteney Town, &c. was formed, there was no harbour at Wick; but, about twenty-five years ago, the public-spirited body just mentioned (to which the country in general, and the county of Caithness in particular, are so much indebted,) constructed one of sufficient amplitude, which has been of incalculable benefit to this district; some time since they added considerably to the accommodation afforded by the haven, and they have more recently extended those improvements. The new works, however, though well executed, have not answered expectation: the access is still precarious; no vessels (heavier than boats) can get in or out at low water, and those of much draught only at high water in spring-tides; and no description of craft can lodge securely, in the new or outer harbour, in a storm: indeed it is the opinion of numbers that the same amount of expenditure would effect the formation of a vastly superior port at Broadhaven, in the bay of Wick. The company have built a very handsome school-house in Pulteney, capacious enough to accommodate from five to six hundred scholars. The chief branch of trade is the herring fishery, which has been pursued to a very great extent, and with infinite advantage; in some seasons the number of barrels of fish cured, on the coasts of this parish, has exceeded 90,000; but for the last five years this fishery has been lamentably unpropitious, by which the curers, and an immense number of labourers of both sexes, have suffered in proportion. The amount of men and shipping employed in this trade, when prosperous, is very great,

 and forms an invaluable nursery for the British navy.
 Ship and boat building is carried on here with much spirit: in the course of one year, Mr. Bremner launched from his yard five vessels, some of them exceeding 300 tons burden; he has also constructed a floating dock, calculated to admit one ship of 500 tons, or two of 100 tons each; the vessels are left quite dry, and can undergo any repairs they may stand in need of. The manufacture of ropes and sail-cloth is of some consequence; there are likewise two distilleries, and a tobacco and snuff manufactory. Two branch banking establishments afford facilities to the trading community; there are three excellent Inns; and the town and adjacent counties are indebted to the press for two news-publications, viz. the 'John-o'-Groats Journal,' and the 'Northern Star'—each issued once a fortnight.
 Wick was erected into a royal burgh in the year 1593, by the influence of George Earl of Caithness, whose principal residence was at the strong castle of Gernege, concerning the antiquity of which there is no tradition, but by its construction and workmanship it appears to have been of Danish origin; it is situate about two miles from Wick, and the greater part of its walls are still standing. Adjoining to it, the same nobleman built Castle Sinclair, of much inferior strength, and now a complete ruin. The Duke of Sutherland is superior of Wick, which is the county town of the shire, a parliamentary burgh, and the station of return at elections; it joins with Kirkwall, Dornoch, Dingwall, Tain, and Cromarty, in returning a member to the imperial legislature; the present representative is James Loch, Esq.

The places of worship are two of the establishment, and others for united seceders, independents, baptists and Roman catholics; the new church, which is of very recent erection, is an elegant edifice. A market is held every Friday; there are four fairs, viz., on the first Tuesday after Palm-Sunday, the first Tuesday after the feast of St. John the Baptist, the first Tuesday after the 21st of July, and the first Tuesday after the 17th of November (old style).

CLACKMANNANSHIRE.

THIS county, the smallest in Scotland, is bounded on the south and west by the Frith of Forth and Stirlingshire, and on the north and east by Perthshire: on the east also, it joins, for a short distance, the county of Fife; and a detached portion of Stirlingshire touches part of its northern verge. Its figure, which is extremely irregular, does not exceed nine miles at its greatest length, nor more than six at its extreme breadth. Anciently the whole of that valuable territory lying between the rivers Forth and Tay, and bounded on the north-west by the chain of the Ochil hills, was called Ross, as being a sort of peninsula, terminating at Stirling. In course of time the district of Ross was divided amongst the shires of Fife, Kinross, and Clackmannan, with the introduction of a slip of Perthshire, on the edge of the Forth, in which is situated the town of Culross. From the shore of the Forth the surface of the county rises gradually to the Ochil hills, the highest of which (Beneleugh) attains the height of two thousand feet above the level of the sea, and is in the parish of Tillicoultry. The higher grounds are partly pastoral, but the whole of the lower parts, adjacent to the Forth, are rich, arable, and beautifully enclosed. Throughout the whole district coal is worked; and ironstone, which is abundant, is wrought to advantage. The manufacture of woollen goods, in shawls, plaidings, and blankets, has, of late years, been established in the parishes of Dollar, Tillicoultry, and Alva, with complete success, more than a thousand persons being employed in these several branches. Besides the Forth, the two streams, called the Devon and Black Devon, water the county.

This shire contains four parishes, and two portions of parishes: its only towns are Alloa and Clackmannan; and its principal villages are Dollar, Alva, and Tillicoultry. The county possesses neither royal or parliamentary burghs, but it unites with KINROSS-SHIRE in returning one member to parliament.

ALLOA

THIS a town of considerable commercial importance, and the capital of the parish of its name; 30 miles n.w. of Edinburgh, 32 s. of Perth, seven from Stirling, the like distance from Dollar, five from Kinross, and three from Tillicoultry; situate on a level at the base of a gentle declivity, close to the Forth, at the spot where it ceases to be a river and becomes a frith; the water is nevertheless deep enough, for six miles above this place, to admit vessels of seventy tons. The quay stretches along the bank; and large vessels or steam-boats can thus lie close up to the thoroughfare, much to the convenience of passengers, and the more worthy of appreciation as this is the only port on the Frith at which such can be accomplished with perfect ease and safety at any tide. Of late years the trade of Alloa has greatly increased; and the town and neighbourhood has long been noted for its extensive distilleries, breweries, malt making, glass-works, and collieries. Immense quantities of whisky are made here for the London market, and the quality and quantity of the ale exceed those of any town in Scotland. An extensive brick and tile manufactory, and copper works (which furnish most of the implements or apparatus for the distilleries), have likewise been for years established here. About one hundred and forty vessels, of various burthens, belong to Alloa and its adjacent creeks. The exports comprise pig iron, ale, whisky, glass, coal, and wool; the imports consist of timber, oak bark, hides, butter, cheese, and great supplies of grain for malting. A daily communication with Edinburgh, Stirling, and the towns on the Frith, is afforded by the steam-packets throughout the year; a coach also runs daily between Glasgow and this town; and the ferry steam-boats (on board of which a carriage and four horses may be driven, without either horses or passengers being removed,) give every facility to families proceeding to the opposite county of Stirling. The government of Alloa is vested in a baron baillie; the sheriff and justice of peace courts for the county are held here, as is likewise the fairs court annually; and a small debts court sits on the first Munday in each month.

The established church, which was first opened for divine worship on the 20th of June, 1819, forms the most prominent object in the town: it is a fine structure, in the pointed style of architecture, and was raised at an expense of nearly £7,000; the spire is very handsome, and was added to the tower by a public subscription; the Earl of Mar, from his own liberality, considerably improved the interior. The charitable and educational institutions embrace a female society for the support of aged and indigent women, a female charity school (established by the Earl of Mar and his daughters), a parochial school, an academy, a sabbath evening school, and the Alloa colliery school, the latter superintended by a master and an assistant; also an association for general religious purposes. A Shakespeare club, and a public assembly-room, have been long upheld; a library, instituted in 1797, is supported by an annual subscription of 10s., and an entrance-fee of one guinea, from each member—it contains about fifteen hundred well-selected volumes on various subjects; a news-room, supplied with London and more local papers—a bowling-green, and the amusement of curling—give to every class its appropriate portion of rational recreation: the convivial festival of 'King Crispin' was first celebrated here in 1824, with the customary pomp, pageantry, and ceremonies.

Though Alloa itself possesses few objects of attraction, its immediate neighbourhood presents scenery at once lovely and bold, beautiful and picturesque: on the north side is the proud range of the Ochil hills, which are covered with verdure to their very summits, and are, perhaps, unrivalled in the fascination of Scottish landscape; the south displays the Forth in all its natural splendour, and its borders the embellishments of rural taste; Stirling Castle on the west, and Alloa Tower on the east, empower the pencil to complete the contour, and present to the eye a panorama of no common brilliancy. The noble and ancient family of Mar have long been the proprietors of this place: they forfeited the earldom by their participation in the ill-digested rebellion of 1715, and the title and privileges were not restored until June, 1824, when the inhabitants, on the welcome intelligence of the resumption of these appanages by their landlord, the late John Francis Earl of Mar (who had endeared himself to his tenantry by a life devoted to the promotion of their happiness and the prosperity of Alloa), celebrated the event by every demonstration of gratitude and joy. The market is abundantly supplied with every necessary on Wednesday and Saturday, particularly on the latter; cattle fairs are held the second Wednesday in February, May, August and November—all new style.

CLACKMANNAN AND LOGIE.

CLACKMANNAN, the capital of the shire, though not entitled to rank so as respects its size, commercial importance, or population, is 32 miles north-west of Edinburgh and two from Alloa, pleasantly situate on an eminence. It was at one period a town of some consequence; but since the improvement of Alloa, and the superior commercial facilities possessed by that place, Clackmannan has sunk into comparative insignificance: the surrounding scenery, however, is of the most delightful description. The principal trade is that derived from the coal mines, which supply employment and humble competence to many of the industrious classes; and there is a large distillery, long and successfully established, in the town. The soil of the parish is considered the richest arable in the shire, and is under the best state of cultivation. The places of worship are the parish church and a relief chapel: the former, erected in 1814, at an expense of £4,500., is a spacious and handsome structure, equal to the accommodation of two thousand persons; the relief chapel was built in 1778, by its appropriate congregation. The other public institutions are the parochial school, and a society for general religious purposes. About the centre of the town stands an ancient tower, to which a gaol was formerly attached.

The village of LOGIE is most agreeably situate at the base of the Ochil hills, at the entrance to Glen-devon, and presents a singularly pleasing scene of natural beauty. The kirk, which is small and neat, stands about five miles from Alloa. The parish of Logie, or Blair-Logie, lies partly in the shires of Stirling, Perth and Clackmannan—the larger portion being on the north bank of the river Forth, opposite Stirling. Within the parish, on a flat peninsula, formed by a sinuosity of the river, the tall and desolate ruin of Cambuskenneth abbey presents itself; the plain adjacent was the arena in which Wallace obtained his first open and signal triumph over the arms of Edward.

DOLLAR, ALVA AND TILlicOUNTRY.

DOLLAR is an improving little village, in the parish of its name, 9 miles from Clackmannan, and 7 from Alloa; situate near the eastern extremity of the Ochil range of hills, on the road from Fife to Stirling, 12 miles from the latter town. A great proportion of the consequent this village now enjoys is to be ascribed to the establishment and endowment of an academy, by a Mr. M'Nab, a native of the parish, who, having realized a considerable fortune in London, bequeathed a large sum to found an institution, in his native district, for the education of young persons. A very handsome edifice was consequently erected in 1819, and masters selected to teach the Latin, Greek, and oriental languages, together with French and other modern tongues, and mathematics, natural philosophy, geography, English, drawing, writing and arithmetic: a female teacher and a surgeon are likewise connected with the institution. The building is a very elegant Grecian structure, to which is attached some pleasant garden ground for the use of the students. From the period of the establishment of this institution, Dollar has been fast emancipating itself from the shades of obscurity, and many handsome villas now grace the village and its vicinity; while some well furnished shops, and a respectable inn or two, impart to it an appearance highly contrasted with the defects it presented but a few years since. In the neighbourhood is the remarkable ruin of Castle Campbell, once the occasional residence of the Argyle family, which was taken, in 1644, by the Marquess of Montrose. The remains occupy the summit of a high and almost insulated rock; and in the hill itself is a frightful chasm, called the 'Kemp's Score,' which still bears some marks of a staircase. The situation of these relics of former strength and grandeur is highly romantic and interesting, and will amply repay the stranger for turning aside to contemplate both the ruins and the scenery.

ALVA is a thriving village, three miles from Alloa, delightfully situate at the foot of the Ochils, from whence there issues a rivulet which turns several mills, and adds to the beauty of the scenery. The parish belongs to Stirlingshire, although locally detached from that county, and surrounded on all sides by Clackmannan. It affords excellent pasture, is in some places well cultivated, and the hills abound with valuable ores, and the district with coal. The manufacture of woollen goods is carried on in this village and its neighbourhood to a very considerable extent; it also possesses a very good Inn. The 'House of Alva,' the residence of a respectable branch of the family of Johnstone, stands on an eminence, projecting from the base of Wood Hill, about 220 feet above the base of the Devon, and 1,400 below the apex of the mountain. From the top a most extensive view is had of the whole course of the Frith of Forth, the coast of Fife, and East Lothian.

The manufacturing village of TILlicOUNTRY is two miles east of Alva, and four west of Dollar; pleasantly situate on the side of the Ochil Hills, and on the road from Stirling to Kinross—nine miles from the former, and fourteen from the latter town. It is well supplied with water from the Devon, which bounds the parish on the north, and intersects it also on the southern part. Within the last few years several extensive manufactories have been established here, and also on the Devon side, chiefly for making woollen shawls, plaidings, blankets, &c.: in these branches the village and its neighbourhood furnish employment to about one thousand persons. A respectable and comfortable inn is in the village. Tillicoultry has for many years been celebrated as containing an educational boarding establishment of a superior grade, where youths are instructed in the Latin and Greek languages, with other branches of education, preparatory to their entering the universities, or other learned institutions. The places of worship are a church of the establishment and a united secession chapel.

DUMBARTONSHIRE,

ANCIENTLY designated LENNOX, and subsequently Dun-bartonshire (which latter, though not the most popular, is the proper appellation), is a small county in the west of Scotland, and considered as within the boundary of the Highlands. On the west it is separated from Argyleshire by Loch Long; Perthshire touches its northern extremity; the county of Stirling bounds it on the east, and also on the north; Lanarkshire on the south-east; and the Clyde separates it from Renfrew county on the south. The figure of this county is rather singular: it describes almost a perfect crescent or semi-circle, protruding on the south and south-west—its concavity being filled, through its whole extent, on the north and north-east, by the county of Stirling. The distance between its eastern and northern extremities is nearly forty miles; while the breadth of the shire is from five to thirteen, and in one part it is only two miles broad. The parishes of Cumbernauld and Kirkintilloch, however, are not included in this measurement, being detached from the main portion on the south-east, and lying between the counties of Lanark and Stirling: this severed portion of the county is twelve miles long, by from two to four and a half miles broad. Altogether the shire comprises 261 square miles: between fifty and sixty thousand acres are cultivated, and the remainder are mostly pastoral hills, woods and lakes—of the latter there are about thirty-one square miles. Originally this district was the residence of a British tribe designated the Attacotti, or Eithacoti—a word importing ‘dwellers along the extremity of the wood.’ The descendants of this people were not enslaved, or expelled from their hunting grounds, by the Romans: they became known as the Britons of Strath-Clyde; and, though almost perpetually at variance with their neighbours, they remained a distinct race till the reign of Malcolm IV. From these people the name of Dumbartonshire is said to be derived, and taken from the appellation of the castle, signifying ‘the hill of the Britons.’ This region, until the early part of the last century, continued to be the ready prey of certain lawless Highland clans, who lurked in the recesses of its interior; and were finally extirpated, or reduced to quiescence and subordination, only by the most vigorous measures that could be adopted by the civil government of the country. Formerly the name of this district was Levenach, signifying the country of the Leven, which in the course of years was corrupted to Levenax, and latterly to Lennox. It was at one period the property of a powerful family of Saxon origin, one of whom was elevated to be Earl of Lennox in the reign of William the Lion. The Earldom of Lennox was raised to a Dukedom in 1581; but Charles, the sixth Duke, dying without issue in 1672, the honours of the family, including the Earldom of Darnley, devolved on Charles II, as nearest male heir, who bestowed them on his natural son, Charles Lennox, after whose demise the estates were sold.

PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, &c.—In recent times, great improvements have been effected in this county, and every year its prolificacy and value are increasing in amount. The soil and climate having been found favourable to the growth of timber, the district now wears a warmer and more cheerful aspect than formerly, while the income accruing from produce has been in a corresponding degree augmented. The cattle of the shire are chiefly of the West Highland breed, some of which are reared in the county; the dairy has become an object of attention and profit on most farms. The roads throughout have been greatly extended and improved within the last forty years, a measure highly conducive to the agricultural and manufacturing interests. Nearly a century has elapsed since the manufacturing dawn broke upon this part of Scotland: bleach-fields, about that period, made their appearance on the banks of Loch Lomond and the Leven; about 1768 the first print works were established on the Leven, soon afterwards others sprung into operation, and at this time there are various manufactures carried on throughout the shire. Until 1831, the glass-works of this county were in high repute, Dumbarton being their chief seat; but, in consequence of the decease of the principals engaged together in this business, it has ceased to exist. Dumbartonshire does not contain numerous mineral treasures within its bosom; but it has an abundance of freestone and slate, and some ironstone.

MOUNTAINS AND LAKES.—These are the most remarkable objects in the county: of the former, the chief are those of Arrochar, Luss, Row, and Roseneath, which are inaccessible to the plough, and are covered with moors, mosses, and woods; the hills of Kilpatrick, on the south, are much less elevated: Benvoirlich, adjoining Perthshire, has the highest altitude, rising 3,330 feet above the level of the sea. The precipitous and rugged summits of these mountains, constituting the Highland district, are frequently capped with snow, and in the finest weather hid amidst the clouds; some of these eminences are apparently volcanic, particularly the rock on which Dumbarton castle stands. There are about ten lakes or lochs; among these are Loch Long and Loch Garc, projecting into the Highland territory from the Firth of Clyde; but the most extensive, and, perhaps, the most beautiful lake in Scotland, is that of Loch Lomond: it lies at the foot of the Grampian mountains, which terminate here, but seem to rise in many islands that appear a continuation of them, or like fragments torn off by some violent convulsion of nature. These islands, thirty-two in number, are lofty and picturesque: on Inch Cailoch (or the Island of Nuns) are the remains of a conventual church; and on Inch Murrins (or the Island of St. Murrinus), two miles long, and converted into a deer-park, are the ruins of a house, once belonging to the Lennox family. This magnificent expanse of water is thirty miles long, in some places eight broad, and covers a surface of 20,000 acres; the depth varies from twenty to one hundred fathoms; it abounds with delicious trout, and the southern part has salmon: the purity of the stream and richness of its banks sooth the mind of the traveller; while the bleach-fields, print-works and cotton-mills, the villages, hamlets and gentlemen’s seats, scattered over an apparently remote district, must impress him with an exalted idea of the industry and wealth of the inhabitants. The lake discharges its waters into the Clyde by the river Leven, which is the only stream of any note in the district.

The county is divided into twelve parishes, ten of which form the presbytery of Dumbarton; it contains but one royal burgh—DUMBARTON, and four burghs of barony. The shire sends one member to parliament. The only contributory burgh (or that which, in conjunction with others, is represented in the senate), belonging to the county, is DUMBARTON.

BONHILL, ALEXANDRIA, BALLOCH, RENTON,

AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BONHILL is a thriving manufacturing little town, in the parish of its name, 61 miles w. of Edinburgh, 18 n. w. of Glasgow, 3 n. of Dumbarton, and within 1 mile of the beautiful and celebrated Loch Lomond; situate on the east side of the Leven, which river separates it from ALEXANDRIA. Considerable business is done here in calico printing, bleaching, and dyeing; and it is altogether a prosperous little place. The town consists of one long and tolerably well built street: about the centre of it, on the margin of the Leven, stands the parish church, a fine building of gothic architecture, with a square tower, containing a handsome clock; it was finished in 1836, at an expense of nearly £3,000, and contains about twelve hundred sittings. On a gentle eminence, near the new bridge, is a relief chapel, erected in 1830; and about a mile north of the town, at the small village of DAMHEAD, is the parish school, which has been conducted by its present deservedly respected master for the last forty years. There is also a subscription school in the town, which was erected in 1790. In 1836 a fine suspension bridge, of iron, was thrown over the Leven. The span is 138 feet, and its cost, with the approaches, £2,200; which was defrayed by Captain Smollett, Esq. of Bonhill. It was erected by Mr. C. Atherton, of Glasgow, civil engineer. The land on both sides the Leven is in a high state of cultivation, which, together with the respectable residences of the manufacturers, and the recent improvements and erections, impart to this place an appearance highly prepossessing. A fair is held on the first Thursday in February, for horses. The population of Bonhill, in 1836, was about 2,000.

About a mile north-west of Bonhill, at the south end of Loch Lomond, is BALLOCH, which contains a large inn and ferry house. At present passengers from Stirling cross here, by ferry boat; but a stone bridge is about to be erected by the proprietor, Sir James Colquhoun, Bart. of Luss. This ferry is 20 miles from Glasgow, by Renton and Dumbarton, but by avoiding the latter place and passing through Bonhill, the distance is reduced to eighteen miles. A fair is held at Balloch, on the 15th of September, for the sale of horses.

ALEXANDRIA is a considerable village, about half a mile west of Bonhill, from which (as before stated) it is separated by the Leven, on the banks of which, below the village, are several extensive print and dye works, a mill for grinding dye woods, &c. Its site is more commanding than that of Bonhill, and its situation both healthful and pleasant. A school was erected here, by subscription, in 1829; it is a well conducted institution. About a mile from the village stands Tullichewin Castle, a noble edifice, the residence of John Horrocks, Esq. from which an extensive view of the river, and of the glen through which it winds, is obtained. Between this seat and Alexandria is the neat mansion of Broonley, the residence of Miss Alston, and two miles distant is Cameron House, the tasteful seat of Captain Smollett, of Bonhill. The population of Alexandria, in 1836, amounted to about 1,600 persons.

RENTON is also a large village, in the parish of Cardross, one mile s. w. of Bonhill, the like distance s. of Alexandria, and 2 n. of Dumbarton, most eligibly situated on the west bank of the Leven, which winds with much beauty below the town, and on whose banks are several extensive print works, and a chymical manufactory. In the immediate neighbourhood of Renton is the old mansion house of Dalquhurn, in which the celebrated historian and novelist, Tobias Smollett, was born. A monumental column, bearing a latin inscription, is here erected to his memory; it is a round pillar of stone work, sixty feet in height, springing from a square base. This memorial was erected, and is sustained by the descendants of that talented individual. In the village is a chapel for original burghers, and an evening school for children employed in the print works. The population of Renton, in 1836, was upwards of two thousand.

CUMBERNAULD, CONDORRET & NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CUMBERNAULD is an ancient village, in a parish of the same name; 33 miles w. of Edinburgh, 29 E. of Dumbarton, 14 N.E. of Glasgow, 13 s. of Stirling, 9 w. of Falkirk, 7 E. of Kirkintilloch, and 7 N. of Airdrie; situate on the main road between Glasgow and Edinburgh through Falkirk, about two miles south of the Forth and Clyde canal, and the line of the projected railway between Edinburgh and Glasgow. The principal business is the weaving of checks, and other striped cotton fabrics, by hand-loom, for the Glasgow manufacturers; and in the neighbourhood are several coal and lime works, and a quarry of good freestone. A baron bailie is appointed by Admiral Fleming, who holds a court here in the beginning of January, April, July and October, for cases of misdemeanor and fines of £1., and for small debts amounting to £2.

The parish church is at the west end of the village, the united secession chapel at the east, and that of the original burghers in a small street leading to the north, opposite to the parish school. Cumbernauld possesses a good public library and subscription news-room. The country around the village is well wooded, and agreeably varied with gentle eminences and rural dales. The principal mansion in the parish is Cumbernauld House, belonging to Admiral Fleming. About a quarter of a mile east of the village is an excellent inn and posting-house, where numerous coaches, to every part of the country, pass every sanctioned day. Fairs are held on the first Tuesdays in May and August—the former for cattle and horses, the latter for toys, &c. The population of the village, in 1836, was 1,400.

CONDORRET is a small village, in the parish of, and about three miles west from Cumbernauld. The inhabitants are chiefly employed, at the hand-loom, in weaving checks and lappet muslins for the manufacturing Glasgow houses. The amount of the population of the village, according to a computation made in 1836, was about 500.

DUMBARTON,

WITH THE VILLAGE OF CARDROSS AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUMBARTON is a royal burgh and sea-port, the capital of the county and of the parish to which it gives name; 59 miles w. of Edinburgh, 15 n.w. of Glasgow, 8 s.e. of Helensburgh, and 3 s. of Bonhill; situate on a low piece of ground, encompassed on its western quarter by the Leven, about half a mile from its junction with the Clyde, and almost secluded from the view of persons on the latter river by the intervening castle of Dumbarton, which stands on a huge rocky eminence on the edge of the Frith, about half a mile from the town. The rock of Dumbarton measures a mile in circumference at its base, diminishing in breadth near the top, which is cloven into two summits, one higher than the other; these are almost perpendicular, and rise to the height of more than three hundred feet. The fortress is entered by a gate at the bottom, and within the rampart which defends the entrance is the guardhouse and lodging for the officers; from hence the ascent is by some flights of steps to the part where the rock divides; here is a strong battery, barracks for the garrison, and a reservoir always filled with water; above these are several batteries which command a most extensive range, especially up and down the Clyde; its defences are kept in constant repair, and it is garrisoned by a limited body of soldiers and functionaries. The house of the governor is injudiciously placed in the cleft of the rock, and erected in a style quite out of character with the picturesque outlines of the precipice. Some parts of the rock are magnetic, and from the crevices there grows a profusion of wild plants, among which appropriately predominates the Scotch thistle, now an exceedingly rare production in its natural state. The rock of Dumbarton has been occupied by works of a warlike character throughout the successive dynasties of eighteen hundred years, and consequently is the most ancient stronghold in the country of which any record or tradition is preserved. In Bede's time it was deemed almost impregnable; but it was reduced by famine in 756, and taken by escalade in 1571; at other periods it has sustained sieges and assaults which our space will not permit us to detail. (The 'Gazetteer' of Messrs. Chambers may be profitably and interestingly consulted upon the subject of this ancient fortress.)

Dumbarton suffered severely from an inundation of the rivers Clyde and Leven some time prior to 1607, for in that year parliament granted the inhabitants 37,000 merks Scottish for raising bulwarks to prevent a similar calamity, with a cession of all the recovered lands. The present town is chiefly composed of one main street, lying in a semicircular form round the head or west end of the peninsula; there are some bye thoroughfare lanes and detached houses, and a suburb on the west side of the haven, leading to Renton; it is connected with the latter by a good stone bridge of five arches, reaching three hundred feet in length. The waters of the Leven form a commodious harbour, and to promote the facility of trade an excellent quay and capacious dock have been constructed, principally at the expense of the late James Lang, Esq., a considerable proprietor in the vicinity; the streets and principal shops are lighted with gas, by a company formed in 1832. Dumbarton was long famed for the manufacture of crown glass; but that branch was extinguished by the death, in 1831, of all the principal proprietors of the works. The discontinuance of this source of industry and emolument has been severely felt by the inhabitants, and proved a serious drawback upon the previous prosperity of the town—as may be evinced by the fact that, when these works were in active operation, they furnished labour to three hundred workmen, and annually consumed 15,000 tons of coal, besides employing 10,000 tons of shipping—and paid from £40,000. to £50,000. excise duties per ann.: the property is now (1836) for sale. The principal trades at present comprise ship-building (for which there are four yards), distilling, brewing, tanning, ironfounding, and rope-making. There are likewise two quarries of excellent freestone working: one, the Dulroech quarry, wrought by Mr. Campbell, supplies the stone for completing the harbour at Port Patrick. In the High-street there are two superior hotels, the 'Elephant' and the 'King's Arms'; and in the same street is a branch establishment of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, and a bank for savings.

Dumbarton was erected into a royal burgh by Alexander II, in the year 1221; and its privileges (including the right of fishing in the Leven) were confirmed by a charter from James VI, in 1609. The municipal government is vested in a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and ten councillors. The sheriff ordinary court and the commissary court are held every Thursday during session, the sheriff small debt court every alternate Thursday, and the burgh court sits (if necessary) on Mondays and Wednesdays during session. The revenue of the burgh exceeds £1,300. per annum; it unites with Renfrew, Rutherglen, Kilmarnock and Port Glasgow in returning one member to parliament. The County and Burgh Buildings were completed in 1825, at an expense exceeding £5,000.; they form a handsome structure, and contain convenient court-rooms, with every suitable office, and a handsome assembly-room; the goal is placed at the rear of the court-house.

At the west end of the High-street stands the parish church, a handsome edifice, with a fine spire and clock; the erection was perfected in 1831, at a cost of £5,000. The other places of worship are a relief chapel at West Bridge-end, a secession chapel near the church, one for Roman catholics at the end of Church-street, and a baptist meeting-house in High-street; what is now designated the 'College-bow,' at the end of College-street, consists of a Gothic arch, the only piece of architecture that remains of the ancient collegiate church, founded in 1450 by Isabel, Dutchess of Albany and Countess of Lennox, and dedicated to St. Patrick.

The principal educational establishment is the burgh grammar-school—a truly eminent institution, of long standing, embracing the advantage of boarding pupils; the present talented conductor is Mr. Gilbert Turner. Another boarding academy, of high reputation, is Ardloch Cottage, beautifully situate on the banks of the Clyde, two miles on the road to Helensburgh; the Rev. W. Bruce is the learned proprietor of this seminary. There are some other well-conducted instructional foundations in the town, including a parochial one and a girls' sewing-school. The inhabitants support a good subscription library, and a respectable news and reading room. The markets, entitled to be holden on Tuesdays and Fridays, are now but thinly attended; the fairs are of much greater importance; they are held on the third Tuesday of March, CARDROSS is a small but respectable village in the parish of its name, situate four miles from Dumbarton, on the road to Helensburgh, and near the shore of the Clyde. Prior to the reformation the church of Cardross was a rectory, belonging to the cathedral of Glasgow, and was seated on a peninsular promontory formed by the Leven and the Clyde; the present church, which stands in the village, is a neat edifice with a square tower. This district is very populous, and the situation of the parish eligible for business, pleasant and salubrious. The vicinage of the village is the residence of many respectable families, whose tasteful mansions embellish the surrounding scenery.

HELENSBURGH is a modern town, burgh of barony, and sea-port, in the parish of Row; 23 miles W. N.W. of Glasgow, 9 S. of Luss, and 8 N.W. of Dumbarton; lying on the Firth of Clyde, opposite to Greenock, from which it is five miles distant. The town, which is a perpetual feu from Sir James Colquhoun, Bart., of Luss, was commenced in 1777; and since that period it has risen into notice as the most convenient and agreeable sea-bathing place on the Clyde: it now consists of a series of handsome houses and streets, laid out on a neat and approved plan. The accommodations for visitors are equal to those of most bathing places: numerous private houses are well furnished for the reception of families or individuals resorting hither in the summer; and there are two superior Hotels, hot, cold and shower baths, a public library, &c. The quay, erected in 1817, extends from the centre of the town a considerable distance into the river; but, being low, a great portion of it is covered at high water; improvements are in contemplation, however, which, when effected, will obviate this inconvenience. About a mile and a half west of the town, at the entrance of the Gare loch, an excellent and substantial new quay has been constructed by Sir Jas. Colquhoun. Helensburgh was elevated to the rank of a burgh of barony in 1802; its municipal government is vested in a provost, two bailies, and four of the town council.

The places of worship are the parish church at Row, two miles west of the town, and another under the establishment in Roseneath road; and chapels for independents and old burghers. A parochial and a sessional school, two infants' schools, and two or three respectable boarding academies, are amongst the educational establishments in the town and parish.

At the distance of two miles, in a western direction, is Roseneath Castle, the seat of his Grace the Duke of Argyll; this noble edifice stands on the opposite side of Loch Gare, and is well worth the stranger's notice. Opposite Roseneath, on the north-west bank of the loch, is situate Ardeneapple Castle, the residence of Lord John Campbell, commanding a fine view of the

Clyde and Gare loch, which flows between these splendid mansions to a distance of seven miles into the main land; and in the vicinage of the town, especially at its eastern end, near the banks of the Clyde, are several handsome seats and residences. In the immediate neighbourhood of Helensburgh resided for twenty-five years the celebrated and scientific Henry Bell, to whose fertile and persevering genius Europe is indebted for the first successful application of steam to the propelling of vessels; and the first trip ever made by steam-boat, in this division of the globe, was from Port Glasgow to Helensburgh, by the Comet, in the year 1812. Mr. Bell was a millwright and engineer; he was born in the parish of Torpichen, county of Linlithgow, April 7, 1767—died at his house (the 'Baths' Inn) in Helensburgh, November 14, 1830—and was interred in the parish church-yard of Row, without a memorial commemorative of the inestimable benefits conferred by him upon his species, by rendering subservient to the use of man that stupendous power which now successfully 'combats the fickle wind and stems the flowing tide.' Fairs are held on the first Wednesday in February for horses, and on the second Wednesday in November for cattle; the fairs formerly held on the 1st of June and 6th of August are discontinued, though authorized by charter. In the year 1835, the population of Helensburgh amounted to about 1,600.

The parish of Row, to which the above town of Helensburgh belongs, is chiefly of a hilly and pastoral character; the low grounds are adjacent to the Clyde, and are fertile and beautiful. The parish church stands near the ferry across Gare loch to the peninsula of Roseneath; opposite it is a point projected into the loch, and it is supposed that from this circumstance the name of the parish is derived—the word row signifying a point. The parish (exclusive of a narrow stripe on Loch Long), is about ten miles in length by four in breadth; bounded by Luss on the east, Cardross on the south-east, on the west by Gareloch and Loch Long, and its south end is washed by the firth of Clyde.

KILPATRICK, DUNTOCHER AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KILPATRICK is a post village in the parish of its name, 53 miles w. of Edinburgh, 10 w. of Glasgow, and 5 e. of Dumbarton; situate on the road between the two last-named towns, and occupying a pleasant site at the foot of a hilly country, in view of the Clyde. 'The name Kilpatrick signifies the 'church of Patrick,' but in this instance tradition varies from fact—the former authority stating it to be the 'cell,' while the latter proves the definition just given to be proper, for Patrick never was an anchorite; it is generally supposed, however, that this parish was the birth-place of the celebrated titular saint of Ireland: the traditional record asserts that, at the age of sixteen, this individual was carried off from this then civilized Roman district by a band of Irish marauders who made a descent upon this part of the coast, and with other captives subjected to slavery in their own comparatively barbarous country; but the 'Ecclesia Hibernica' distinctly states that he voluntarily landed on the northern shore of Ireland in the year 461, after a residence of twenty-six years in the Roman capital: the visit strengthened the connexion that had priorly existed between the two nations. Within its limited locality the village has not the advantage of any manufactory; but at Dalmuir, one mile and a half eastward, is an extensive paper mill, and another for crushing or chipping dye-woods; on the banks of the Clyde are large chymical works; and at LITTLE-MILL, a mile to the west, is a distillery and a ship-building yard.

At the entrance of the village from Dumbarton stands the parish church, a neat stone edifice, surmounted by a handsome square tower, erected in 1812. At the east end of the village is a relief church, and not far from it the parochial school. At Dungglass, a mile and a half hence, are to be seen the ruins of an old fortification or Roman boundary, and at Bowling-bay, about midway between Dungglass and Kilpatrick, where there is a good inn and posting-house, commences the Forth and Clyde canal, which, after thirty-nine miles' eastern traverse, empties itself into the Forth at Grangemouth, thus connecting the German ocean with the western channel: this great work was begun in 1768, and opened throughout on the 28th of July, 1790; vessels drawing eight feet water, having a nineteen feet beam and a seventy-three feet keel, can navigate this noble national junction. In 1836, the population of KILPATRICK village was estimated at 850, that of DALMUIR about 400, and LITTLE-MILL nearly 300.

DUNTOCHER is a considerable village, until lately forming part of the parish of Kilpatrick, but now a separate ecclesiastical district; it is situate two miles north from Kilpatrick, and contains four large mills for spinning and manufacturing cotton, together with coal and lime works—all called into operation by the enterprise of William Dunn, Esq., of Duntocher, the spirited proprietor; there is also a manufactory for spades and shovels. The principal part of the town (for its size and population entitle it to the rank), which belongs to Mr. Dunn, is lighted with gas, from works established by that gentleman. The church of the new parish was erected in 1836, at an expense of £1,700; the other places of worship are an original burgher and united secession chapels. Perhaps the most ancient bridge in Scotland exists here; a stone near to it bears the following inscription:—

'PONT.EM HUNC. EXT.
RUI. CURAVIT. IMP. T.
ÆL. ANTONIN. HADR.
AUG. P. P. QUINT. LOLL.
URBIC. LEG. FER. COL-

DOMINUS DE BLANTYRE,
A. ÆR. CHR.
M. D. CC. LXXXII.'

which is thus translated.—'This bridge was built under the auspices of the Emperor Titus Ælius Antoninus Hadrianus Augustus, father of his country, by Quintus Lollius Urbicus, his lieutenant; being almost ruined, it was restored by Lord Blantyre in the year 1772.' A little above the bridge there was a fort and watch-tower visible when Pennant visited this quarter in 1772, but no vestige of them now remains. The population of Duntocher, in 1836, was 3,368.

KIRKINTILLOCH AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

KIRKINTILLOCH (or Kirkintulloch) is an ancient and thriving manufacturing town, burgh of barony, and capital of the parish of its name, 40 miles w. of Edinburgh, 20 s. s. w. of Stirling, 16 E. of Dumbarton, the like distance w. of Falkirk, 7 n. of Glasgow, the like distance w. of Cumbernauld, 5 s. w. of Kilsyth, and 3 s. E. of Campsie. It is situate on the water of Luggie, near to its junction with the Kelvin; and is understood to derive its name from its locality, the original designation being Caer-pen-tulloch, signifying, in Cambro-British, the fort on the head or end of a hill, which is descriptive of the site of the town, standing as it does on the verge of a ridge, advancing from the south into a plain on the banks of the Kelvin. The wall of Antoninus passed through this town, and one of his principal forts stood on the summit of a hill, a little south-west of the parish church; the site of the fortress is even to this day recognised by a deep moat called 'Peel.' This and the neighbouring parish of Cumbernauld are separated from the rest of the county by the north point of Lanarkshire, and are surrounded by that county and Stirlingshire. The weaving of lappet muslin is carried on here to a great extent by the hand-loom, in which the majority of the inhabitants are employed. There are also considerable quantities of whisky, silk plush, silk hats, locks, &c. made here for the Glasgow market: print works, an iron foundry, and several other manufactories are in the neighbourhood. Few places possess more eligible advantages for inland conveyance than this; that great undertaking the Forth and Clyde canal passing through the town, affords a speedy and certain transit to the east or west coasts of Scotland. The Monkland and Kirkintilloch railway, opened in the spring of 1826, and which extends to Airdrie, joining the Ballochnie railway about a mile from that town, is within six miles of Kirkintilloch: it also joins the Garnkirk and Glasgow railway. In 1835 about 40,000 tons of coal, and 3,325 tons of pig iron were shipped on the canal from this railway, besides the consumption of the neighbourhood, which amounts to about 16,000 tons of coal from the railway alone. The proposed Edinburgh and Glasgow railway will pass over the Monkland and Kirkintilloch a mile south of the town. Kirkintilloch is a free burgh of barony; its first charter was conferred by William the Lion, dated at Forres; it was granted to William Cumming, of Cumbernauld and Kirkintilloch, and was subsequently confirmed and its privileges enlarged. The town is governed by two bailies and twelve councillors, elected by the burghesses, about thirty three in number. The bailies possess the power of deciding in all causes within the liberty of the burgh, equal to the right exercised by sheriffs of counties. The town has a police establishment, under the regulation of commissioners appointed by the provisions of the local act of parliament for the government of small towns. Gas works are being erected by the commissioners for lighting the town. The court-house and jail, which form a substantial building at the cross, is ornamented with a fine spire containing a clock. A justice of peace court is held once a month—on Saturday; and a burgh court every Saturday.

The parish church, which was built in 1644, and is in the form of a cross, stands near the centre of the town. The other places of worship comprise a chapel of ease, erected by subscription in 1837, situate in Leadgate; an original burgher chapel, in Townhead; a united secession chapel, in Back causeway; and a methodist meeting-house, near Cowgate. Fairs are held on the second Tuesday in May, the last Thursday in July, old style, both for cattle; and October 20th, for cattle and horses.—The population of the parish has increased about 400 since the census of 1831.

POST OFFICE, Leadgate, John Young, Post Master.—Letters from GLASGOW arrive (by mail gig) every morning at six, and are despatched every evening at eight.—Letters from FALKIRK arrive every evening at eight, and are despatched every morning at six.—A Receiving House is at Alexander M'Donald's, Cowgate, which closes every evening at half-past seven.

LUSS, ARROCHAR, TARBERT & NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LUSS is a small romantic village in a parish of its name, 72 miles w. n. w. of Edinburgh, 28 n. w. of Glasgow, 31 s. e. of Inverary, 13 n. n. w. of Dumbarton, 10 n. n. w. of Bonhill, and 9 n. of Helensburgh; most delightfully situate on the western margin of the justly famed Loch Lomond. A cotton manufactory formerly flourished here, which has been discontinued, and the building was accidentally destroyed by fire a short time since. The only business of consequence at present is the Camstraddan and Luss slate quarries, from which considerable quantities of excellent blue slate are obtained, and conveyed to distant parts of the country, by means of small sailing vessels on Loch Lomond and down the river Leven. The parish school is an excellently conducted institution; the master takes a few boarders, and, assuredly, if healthfulness of situation and beauty of scenery be desirable, few places possess equal advantages with Luss. But that which renders it a place of paramount interest is the noble Loch, on the margin of whose pelucid waters it reposes, surrounded by some of the most inviting and delightful scenery in Scotland. In summer, the numerous pleasure parties crowding here, impart a gaiety of appearance to the lake, which, if possible, heightens the interest of this charming spot. A steam boat sails every day (Sunday excepted) from the Balloch Inn, at the south-end of the loch, calling at Luss, Tarbert, Inversnaid, the foot of Ben Lomond, &c. returning the same afternoon. Small boats can be hired by pleasure parties, who are desirous of visiting any of the adjacent shores, and the Royal Oak Hotel is a most agreeable and comfortable inn for those who wish to remain for a few days at Luss. Here resided the Rev. and learned Dr. Stuart, who translated the Bible into the Gaelic language; and on the opposite side of the loch, near Drymen, lived, for a considerable time, Lord Napier, the inventor of logarithms. A fine view of Loch Lomond, with its numerous islands, is obtained from Stronehill, a considerable elevation about half a mile north of the inn. About 2½ miles south of Luss is Rosdhu House, the seat of Sir James Colquhoun, Bart. of Luss; it is a handsome building, with a fine portico, seated on a low point of land, surrounded on three sides by Loch Lomond. The church of Luss was dedicated to St. Mackessog, a native of Lennox, who was a bishop and confessor, and suffered martyrdom about the year 520, at a place below Luss, on the side of the lake, where a large cairn of stones was raised to his memory. He was buried in the parish church, and was long regarded as the tutelary saint of this part of the country. The population of the village of Luss, in 1836, was 300.

ARROCHAR (more properly Arroquhar) is a parish lying between Loch Lomond and Loch Long, bounded on the south by Luss. It extends nearly sixteen miles in length by three in breadth. The village, which is situate at the head of Loch Long, is ten miles north of Luss, and about two, west, of Tarbert: it contains a good inn, well known to travellers in this mountainous and romantic district.

TARBERT is a much famed inn and small village, on Loch Lomond, about 8 miles north of Luss, and to distinguish it from Tarbert, on Loch Fine, in Argyleshire, is generally designated Tarbert, on Loch Lomond. This place, which is much visited by tourists, is considered the most pleasing and romantic spot on Loch Lomond, and Ben Arthur, or 'the Cobbler,' is best seen near to the inn. The distance between Loch Lomond and Loch Long is here about two miles, and the arrangements for conveyance in summer are such, that a person may leave Glasgow, about six o'clock in the morning, sail to Dumbarton, proceed by coach to Balloch Inn, embark in the Loch Lomond steamer, and sail to Tarbert, walk or ride across the isthmus to Arrochar, where a steamer is ready to start again for Glasgow, down Loch Long and up the Clyde; or if inclined to take a tour among the scenery of the west, a coach is ready to start from Tarbert Inn, when the Loch Lomond steamer arrives, which goes through Arrochar and Glencroe, to Cairndow, on Loch Fine, where a steamer waits to forward passengers to Inverary.

NEW KILPATRICK, MILNGAVIE & NEIGHBOURHOODS.

NEW (or EAST) KILPATRICK is a parish partly in this county, and partly in that of Stirlingshire; its extent is upwards of six miles from north to south, by a breadth of from two to four miles. The Forth and Clyde canal intersects it in its northern part entering the district, on crossing the Kelvin, by a stupendous aqueduct bridge. The district was separated from Old Kilpatrick, which bounds the parish on the west, in the year 1649. The parish church is six miles north-west from Glasgow, and is a neat building, erected in 1807. Garscube House, the residence of Sir Archibald Campbell, Bart. of Succoth, is the principal seat in the neighbourhood, worthy of notice.

MILNGAVIE (popularly Milnguy) is a thriving manufacturing village, and the principal one in the parish of New Kilpatrick, but locally situated on the border of Stirling county, 12 miles E. of Dumbarton, 5 E. of Duntocher, 21 s.w. of Stirling, 7 n.n.w. of Glasgow, 51 w. of Edinburgh, and 2 miles from New Kilpatrick. In the village is an extensive mill for cotton spinning, and a large print-work establishment; and in the neighbourhood are several bleach fields, print-works, and a distillery. There is a relief chapel in the village, but the parish church is two miles to the south. The country around is finely diversified with hill and dale, and ornamented with many respectable family mansions. At Mugdock Castle,  $\frac{2}{3}$  miles north, is a remarkable echo: also a small beautiful loch, on the margin of which is an eminence, crowned with an observatory. There is a druidical temple about 3 miles north-east, on Craigmaddie moor, near the remains of Craigmaddie Castle, called the "Old Wife's Lifts": it consists of three immense stones, two of which are erect and support the third. The population of the village, in 1836, was 1400.

To GLASGOW, a Coach, from Milngavie, every morning (Sunday excepted) at nine, goes through Kelvin Dock.

DUMFRIES-SHIRE.

THIS is a large and important shire, in the south of Scotland; bounded on the east by the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, and part of Cumberland; on the north-west by Ayrshire; on the south-west by the stewartry (or county) of Kirkcudbright; on the north by the counties of Lanark, Peebles, and part of Selkirk; and its south and south-eastern boundary is washed by the Solway Frith. The length of the county, from north-west to south-east, is nearly fifty-five miles; and its extreme breadth, from the south to where it touches Peebles-shire on the north, is nearly thirty miles. According to the latest and best surveys, it embraces an area of 1,228 square miles; or 785,920 statute acres of land, and about ten square miles of lakes. At the epoch of the Roman invasion under Agricola, in the year 80, this part of Scotland was inhabited by a race called the Selgova, who spread themselves as far as the banks of the Dee, in Galloway: these people continued independent till the year 875, when they were overpowered by the Northumbrian Saxons, who retained the ascendancy for two centuries; during the lapse of this time, however, immense swarms of adventurers from Ireland and Cantyre effected a settlement; and from these intermixtures sprung the Picts, who progressively acquired the paramount sway. At this period Dumfries-shire is understood to have formed part of Cumbria, which district Edgar bequeathed to his youngest brother David, who encouraged the cupidity of many opulent Anglo-Norman barons, and the country was then divided into extensive baronies. The almost interminable border warfare was a frightful calamity to the inhabitants of Dumfries-shire and Cumberland, who for centuries were subjected to all the horrors attendant upon barbarous incursion and reckless feudal hostility. The whole county is now popularly apportioned into three districts, namely—ESKDALE on the east, ANNANDALE in the middle, and NITHSDALE on the west.

SOIL, PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, &c.—The lower parts of Dumfries-shire are based with brown, red, yellow or white sandstone, which dips generally to the Solway; a considerable body of limestone also lies in this quarter, and beds of ironstone are occasionally found to accompany the other strata. Coal prevails in great plenty in the upper portions of Nithsdale and lower parts of Eskdale, the two extreme points of the county. The limestone of the shire has been of great value in improving the lands; marl likewise abounds in various tracts, and of freestone and whinstone there is a sufficiency in all directions: marble is also procured for different useful and ornamental purposes; and near the northern confines of the county, at Wanloch-head, there are inexhaustible mines of lead. As in most districts of the south of Scotland, there is a very general mixture of arable and pasture land. The upper part of the shire, or Annandale, Eskdale and Ewesdale, is principally devoted to sheep-feeding; in the lower portion the farms are larger, and more adapted to agriculture; the plantations and pleasure-grounds are consequently more numerous, and are remarkable for their beauty and richness. In Annandale the improvement of the breed of cattle has been most apparent; in 1829, at the Highland Society's meeting, some of the choicest specimens of the pure breed of Galloway cows, heifers, and bullocks, that were ever reared in the country, were exhibited by J. J. Hope Johnstone, Esq. The number of oxen, sheep and pigs nurtured in this county are invariably more than adequate to the demands of its population; an exportation, therefore, of the excess product takes place—and the same may be observed of corn, wool, hides and skins. The condition of the county is represented as having been greatly improved within the last thirty years, and at present its affairs may be considered in as prosperous a state as those of any other district in Scotland. Dumfries shire cannot be ranked as a manufacturing county: the principal branches under this head of commercial industry are the manufacture of hosiery goods and cotton-spinning; the chief seat of the former is limited to the capital of the county—the latter to the town of Annan.

RIVERS, &c.—The chief, indeed the only rivers of consequence, are the NITH, the ANNAN, and the ESK; to these streams the principal divisions of the county obtain their names; from each of these greater divisions diverge vales, which likewise have denominations taken from the waters that are poured through them, such as Moffatdale, Dryfesdale, and Ewesdale. The Nith rises in the eastern hills of Ayrshire, enters Nithsdale by the foot of Carsoncone hill, in the parish of Kirkconnel, and descends into the valley of Sanquhar; having forced its way through the hills which surround this valley, it receives the Crawick water from the north, and the Euchar from the south. The river Cairn, which forms the western boundary of the county, unites its stream with the Nith a little above Dumfries, a short distance southward from which the latter river empties itself into the Solway Frith. Near Jarborough castle, on the banks of the river Cairn, are to be seen those earthen mounds, called 'Bow-butts,' where the barons of Glencairn, with their vassals, used to practise archery. The river Annan (as well as the Tweed and Clyde), takes its rise in the mountains above Moffat, and runs through the flat part of Annandale for upwards of twenty-three miles; in this course it receives the Evan and Moffat waters, and the Wamphray stream, which irrigates a pleasant valley of that name: passing Johnstone, some other tributary rivulets increase its volume; at Loch Maben it is enlarged by the Ae, and a little lower by the Dryfe, which courses through the vale of Dryfesdale, or Drysdale: at length, approaching the kirk of St. Mungo, it flows over a rocky bed, which may be considered the termination of the vale of Annan. The higher part of Eskdale, for nearly twenty miles, is mountainous: the Esk, in its progress through this district, is joined by the Black Esk, the Meggot, the Ewes, and the Wauchope—(almost the whole of this division belongs to the noble family of Buccleugh): after reaching Broomholm, the river traverses a flat country, and a part of Cumberland, before it reaches the Solway Frith; during this portion of its course it receives the Liddal from Roxburghshire, and the Line water from the county of Cumberland: the entire length of its race is about thirty-eight miles, thirty of which are in the shire of Dumfries. The Solway differs very materially from other estuaries receiving in Scotland the appellation of 'Firths:' its waters are shallow, and have long sandy reaches at the ebbing of the tide. The ebbs and flows of the Solway are proverbial for the rapidity of their action, and this is particularly the case during spring tides and the prevalence of gales from the south-west: the borderers, though well mounted, have, in numerous melancholy instances, been overwhelmed and drowned, when returning from the Cumberland fairs, in crossing the bed of this estuary; even the most experienced persons are liable to be overtaken by the tides, when they have the best expectation of fording it in safety: on one occasion, within these few years, a gentleman who had been thus engulfed was preserved by the sagacity and courage of his horse, which swam with him right across the Firth.

It is ascertained that Dumfries-shire was placed under the government of a sheriff in the thirteenth century, at which period it included the stewardry of Kirkcudbright; the district of Annandale, however, continued to be a stewardry from the period when it merged in the crown, by the accession of Bruce, till the abolition of the heritable jurisdictions. Up to the era of the reformation, Dumfries-shire formed part of the extensive diocese of Glasgow, and was divided into the two deaneries of Nithsdale and Annandale; it now possesses forty-three parishes, which are divided into five presbyteries and one synod. There are four Royal Burghs in the county, viz., DUMFRIES, ANNAN, SANQUHAR, and LOCHMABEN; and six burghs of barony—Moffat, Lockerby, Langholm, Ecclefechan, Thornhill, and Minniehive. The SHIRE sends one member to parliament, and the Royal Burghs before named join with KIRKCUDBRIGHT in returning another representative.

ANNAN AND BRIDE-KIRK.

ANNAN is a royal burgh, the capital of the parish of its name, and of the district of Annandale, 79 miles s. of Edinburgh, 87 s.e. of Glasgow, 43 n.e. of Kirkcudbright, 27 s. of Moffat, 16 s. e. of Dumfries, 11 s. of Lockerbie, and 6 from Ecclefechan; situate on the east or left bank of the river Annan, rather more than a mile above its influx into the Solway Firth. The name is derived from that of the river, whose appellation is traced to the Celtic An, signifying simply water. It is a town of considerable antiquity, and is one of the most ancient burghs in Scotland. Annan was a Roman station, and the Veromum of the geography of Ravenna. It seems to have been held by the Britons after the departure of the Romans, till they were subdued by the Saxons of the Northumbrian kingdom, when it came to the Scotch. It afterwards became a principal port, and was granted, with the territory of Annandale and the port of Lochmaben, to the ancestors of Robert Bruce, by some of whom a castle was erected, which was once occupied as a church, but afterwards went to ruins, and the original wall now forms part of the gaol and town wall. Upon the death of David II, in 1371, this castle, Lochmaben, and the lordship of Annandale, came to Thomas Randolph, Earl of Murray, and went, with his sister Agnes, to the Dunbars, Earls of March; after their forfeiture it went to the Douglasses, who also lost it by similar conduct, and then, having come to Alexander, Duke of Albany, he, for rebelling against his brother, King James III, and plundering the fair of Lochmaben, in 1484, also forfeited it. Since that period it continued in the hands of the king, and became the great key of the western border. By the accession of the Bruce family to the throne, it became a royal burgh. The existing charter was granted by James VI of Scotland, and is dated July 10th, 1612; it confirms previous charters, and particularly recites one conferred by James V, dated 1st March, 1538, which had with others been burned and destroyed by sieges and the inroads of the English, particularly in 1298, when they entered Annandale, and burnt the town with its church. The burgh is governed by a provost, three bailies, fifteen councillors, a treasurer, dean of guild, and town clerk. It unites with Dumfries, Sanquhar, and Lochmaben, in returning one member to parliament.

The port or harbor of Annan is free, and vessels of 250 tons can come within half a mile of the town, but vessels of much larger burden can enter the river at its confluence with the Solway, distant little more than a mile from the town, at which place two new wooden wharfs or jetties have recently been erected by rival steam boat companies, whose vessels generally make the passage between Annan and Liverpool in twelve hours or less, that is, in one tide only, from harbour to harbour; and a vessel belonging to each company makes, at least, one trip to and from weekly. The convenience afforded by this rapidity of communication with Liverpool, has greatly increased the trade, and a considerable quantity of bacon, grain, live stock, and other commodities, are thus weekly conveyed to the Liverpool market; while, by return of these steam vessels, the principal supply of general merchandize is imported for the consumption of the town, and adjoining country to a very considerable distance, as the harbour of Annan is, in many respects, preferable to that of Dumfries.

A manufactory for spinning cotton has been, for some years, successfully in operation here, by a company whose parent establishment is at Manchester. Among the other branches of trade are those of ship-building, tanning, brewing, and malting; and a company has completed arrangements for erecting a distillery upon an extensive scale, a short distance from the town, up the river. Branches of the 'Commercial Bank of Scotland' and of the 'British Linen Company' are settled here; there is also a bank for savings. Limestone and freestone is abundant in many parts of the parish, which has been long famed for the superior quality of potatoes cultivated within it. Annan, of late years, has been much improved by new streets and buildings. The old bridge, which consisted of five arches, has been removed, and a new one erected on its site, towards which a grant of £3,000. was obtained from government, and the remainder supplied by the county. On the west are the town-house and marketplace, and at the east end of the town is a fine new church, built of stone, with a tower and spire: there are also burgher and relief chapels, parochial and infants' schools, several benevolent societies, and a subscription library: but the principal educational establishment is a classical academy, a very handsome building, erected in 1820, in which are taught most of the elegant and all the useful branches of education; it is governed by the magistrates and a committee of hearitors, and the preceptors consist of a rector, and teachers in the several branches.

The market is held on Thursday, at which, during the season, large quantities of pork are sold. There are fairs on the first Thursday in February, the first Thursday in May, the third Thursday in August, first Tuesday after the 29th of September, third Thursday in October, and the first Tuesday after the 11th of Nov.

BRIDE-KIRK is a modern village, 3 miles north of Annan, situate on the west bank of the Annan river. The extent of the parish is about five miles long by three broad, the whole of which is cultivated. It is a new formed parish, and originally consisted of a part of Annan, a part of Hoddam, and a part of Cmmer-trees. The principal land proprietor is Mrs. General Dirom, through whose interest it was erected into a parish in May, 1836; and the same lady built the kirk in 1835; she is looked upon as the responsible supporter of the minister. The remains of Bride-kirk Tower are in this parish. Annan is the post town.

CAERLAVEROCK PARISH,

INCLUDING THE VILLAGES OF BANK-END, BRIDGE-END, OLD QUAY & NEIGHBOURHOODS.

THE parish of CAERLAVEROCK occupies a sort of Peninsula, formed by the Solway Firth, the River Nith, and Lochan water. The only object of curiosity is the magnificent ruin of Caerlaverock castle, situate on a level plain, between 8 and 9 miles from Dumfries. It is an ancient possession of the Maxwells, once a powerful family in this part of Scotland, and wardens of the western marches. It was besieged and captured by Edward I, in 1300, and by Cromwell in 1651. After this it ceased to be a tenable fortress, and fell into decay: it now presents a ruin massive and picturesque, eminently worthy the notice of the tourist. This ancient fortalice was the scene of a foul and remarkable murder, about the middle of the fourteenth century, which has furnished the theme of a very beautiful ballad by K. Sharpe, Esq. published in the 'minstrelsy of the Scottish border.' The tragic event was connected with the assassination of the Red Cumine (a powerful chieftain, who formerly held the regency of Scotland), by Robert Bruce, attended by Kirkpatrick and Lindsay, two of his adherents.

BANK-END is a clean, pleasant, and small village, about 6 miles from Dumfries, containing the parochial and grammar school, which is also a boarding academy: there are two others in the parish—Highmains (English), and the village school. The manse and kirk are at BRIDGE-END, a small village about a mile from Bank-End. The old quay wharf, on the banks of the Nith, in this parish, is where numbers of coasting traders discharge and take in their cargoes, for various parts of the united kingdom; and when the tide serves, the steamers from Liverpool, &c. land their passengers here, from whence they are conveyed to Dumfries in omnibusses.

CLOSEBURN, GLENCAIRN, DUNBREGGAN,

MINNIEHIVE, KEIR, KIRKMICHAEL, AND TYNRON.

CLOSEBURN is an inland parish in the district of Nithsdale; it has incorporated with it the parish of Dalgarno, and is about ten miles in length, by about seven and a half in breadth. The annual produce of the parish amounts to £40,300, of which £3,500 arises from the sale of lime only. The ruins of the ancient Castle of Closburn, the property of C. G. S. Menteach,

Esq. forms an interesting object in the scenery here, which derives additional beauty from some romantic waterfalls, within two miles of the castle, and some caverns, in one of which latter the hunted covenanters used to take up their abode, to evade pursuit: it is considered to be the place alluded to by the author of Waverley, in his description of the cave occupied by

Balfour, of Burley. A free school was most amply endowed in 1723, by one John Wallace, a native of the parish; it is placed under the government of the presbytery of Penpont, and in it all the children of the parish are taught the elements of education, free of expense.

The parish of GLENCAIRN is also in Nithsdale, and extends eleven miles in length, by from three to five in breadth. Several small rivulets meander beautifully through it, enriching the scenery, to which the elegant mansion and grounds of H. Ferguson, Esq. contribute much. On the south-west verge of the parish is Loch Urr, from which issues the river of that name. A new church is in progress of erection (1836), a short distance from the site of the old edifice.

DUNBREGGAN is a small well-built village, in the parish of Glencairn, five miles and a half south-east of Penpont, situate on the north bank of the Dalwhat water, where it is crossed by a bridge to MINNIEHIVE, a small but pleasant village, in the same parish as Dunbreggan, half a mile therefrom, and sixteen from Dumfries. This is a place of some antiquity, and formerly of more consequence than it now is, having been a burgh of barony, chartered in the reign of Charles I.

CUMMERTREES, DALTON, MOUSWALD, RUTHWELL,

POWFOOT AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CUMMERTREES is a particularly clean and neat village, 84 miles s. of Edinburgh, the like distance s. e. of Glasgow, 22 n. w. of Carlisle, 13 s. e. of Dumfries, 10 s. e. of Lochmaben, the like distance s. from Lock-erbie, 6 from Ecclefechan, and 4 from Annan. The parish, which is about four miles in length by three in breadth, is bounded on the north-east by the river An-nan, and on the south by the Solway Frith. It is a flat, fertile, and well cultivated district, and is now well enclosed. The name is derived from the British words Cum-ber-tree, signifying the hamlet at the short valley, and is sufficiently descriptive of the local situation of the village.—About a mile south-east of Cummertrees is Powfoot, a very pretty watering place, and a branch station of an extensive fishery.

DALTON is a small village between three and four miles from Cummertrees. The parish, which now comprehends the two ancient ones of Meikle Dalton and Little Dalton, is four miles in length by three in breadth. Its general appearance is that of high cultivation, which has been extended over once unprofitable moors and commons. The village contains the kirk and parochial school, together with a female day and Sunday school.

MOUSWALD village is situate six miles from Dumfries, lying between that town and Annan. The kirk, which is about a quarter of a mile from the village, on an elevated site, contains a dilapidated effigy of Sir Simon Carruthers, once laird of Mouswald. Sir Robert Grierson, Baronet, of Lagg, has a noble mansion here.

DORNOCK, GRATNEY (OR GREтна),

WITH SPRINGFIELD, KIRKPATRICK-FLEMING AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DORNOCK is a small village, 84 miles s. of Edinburgh, 18 s. of Langholm, 17 s. e. of Dumfries, 12 s. e. of Lockerbie, 7 s. of Ecclefechan, and 2 e. of Annan; situate on the high road from the latter town to Carlisle, and about a quarter of a mile from the shore of the Solway Frith, where there is good sea-bathing. The parish, which is about two miles and a half square, is washed on its southern part by the Solway. An ancient erection, called Stapleton tower, stands on the estate of Stapleton, in this parish; as is Robgill tower, formerly belonging to the Irvings, of Robgill. The Duke of Buccleugh and the Earl of Mansfield are the principal owners of the land, which for the most part is in a high state of cultivation. The kirk and the parochial school are in the village.

GRATNEY (more popularly called Gretna) is a parish in the south part of the county, lying on the west side of the small river Sark. The present parish comprehends the old parishes of Gretna and Redpatrick, or Redkirk, which were united in 1609. The village of Gretna, or Gretna-green, is situate on the road from Annan to Carlisle—eight miles and a half from the former, nine miles and a half north from the latter town; and is the first stage on entering Scotland from England. This village has been long noted for the celebration of clandestine marriages: any person can perform the ceremony, which merely amounts to a confession before witnesses that certain persons are man and wife—such an acknowledgment being sufficient to constitute a valid marriage in Scotland; by a certificate being subscribed by the officiating priest and witnesses, the union becomes quite indissoluble. Upon the average, three hundred couples are thus married in the year; and the fee charged varies, according to circumstances and the means of the party, from half a guinea to £40. and even £50. An attempt was made in the general assembly of the kirk of Scotland, in 1826, to suppress this system of fraud and profanity, but without success. It is now upwards of seventy-five years since this traffic was commenced by a person of the name of Joseph Paisley, a tobacconist by trade, and not a blacksmith, as is usually supposed; after a long life of desecration and drunkenness, he died so lately as 1814. At present there are five rivals here for the hymeneal office; perhaps the most respectable of these is a Mr. Linton, of Gratney-hall—a large house recently converted into an inn, where visitors receive every attention and accommodation. About a quarter of a mile from Gretna is the village of SPRINGFIELD, which participates in this matrimonial trade; this village is the property of Sir Patrick Maxwell, and that of Gretna belongs to Colonel Wm. Maxwell. At SARKFOOT, about a mile from the latter village, every convenience is found for sea-bathing. About the same distance, in another direction, is the small village of RIGG, where there is a dissenting chapel.

The parish of KIRKPATRICK-FLEMING, highly interesting in Scottish legend and song, is bounded on the east by Gratney; the kirk and parochial school, which stand at the southern end of the parish, are about three miles from Gretna. Lime and freestone abound in this district, in which are likewise several mineral springs, possessing medicinal properties similar to those of Hartfield spa, near Moffat.

DUMFRIES, MAXWELLTOWN & NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUMFRIES, the capital of its county and parish, a royal burgh, the seat of the synod and presbytery of Dumfries, is 338 miles from London (by the route of Manchester), 71 s. e. of Edinburgh, 72 s. e. of Glasgow, 180 s. w. of Aberdeen, 60 s. e. of Ayr, 56 s. e. of Kilmarnock, 55 n. e. of Wigtown, 33 n. w. of Carlisle, 34 s. e. of Dumfreck, 30 w. by s. of Lanholm, 28 n. e. of Kirkeudbright, 26 s. e. of Sanquhar, 18 n. e. of Castle-Douglas, 15 n. n. w. of Annan, 16 w. of Ecclefechan, 14 s. e. of Thornhill, 12 s. w. of Lockverbie, and 8 s. w. of Lockmaben. This town, which may be considered as the metropolis of the south-west quarter of Scotland, is seated on the left bank of the river Nith, about nine miles above its confluence with the Solway Frith. Of the precise period at which it was founded no record has been preserved. Antiquarians, without recurring to the Celtic, have bewilderd themselves in endeavouring to settle the etymology of its name, which, in fact, has undergone but one trifling change from what it was originally, viz. Drum-a-Phrish—afterwards altered to 'Drumfries,' and, within the last sixty or seventy years, changed to Dumfries for the sake of euphony: Drum-a-Phrish, or 'Drum-fries,' signifying in the Celtic 'the back or ridge of a woody or shrubby eminence'; is truly descriptive of the situation of the town—rising, as it does, gradually from the river side, and embosomed in one of the finest and best sheets of dale country in Scotland: the prospect, which is terminated at the distance of a few miles by a continued chain of hills, covered with wood, or cultivated to their summits, is altogether one of the grandest scenes in Britain. Serving as a kind of capital, not only to its own shire, but also a portion of Galloway—and possessing an easy and frequent intercourse with London, Edinburgh, and Glasgow—it is a place of great resort for the nobility and gentry of the neighbouring counties: independently of those who have amusement only in view, many families are attracted hither by the cheapness of living, the salubrity of the air, and, above all, by its excellent seminaries of education; society, therefore, possesses a greater share of elegance and gaiety here, than can be found, probably, in any other town of its size in Scotland. The circuit court of justiciary, which is held twice a year (in spring and autumn), induces many to repair to Dumfries; and the time has been when the judges were attended to court by a whole body-gard of country gentlemen; but this, like many other former customs, has progressively sunk into disuse. In a work published in 1832, entitled the 'Picture of Dumfries,' published by John Galtly, of Edinburgh, we find the following passage:—'The late Sir Thomas Reid Burnet, the late Alexander Maxwell, Esq., of Terraughty, A. Kay, Esq., and others, themselves Dumfrieseans, and gentlemen of great influence in London, exerted themselves in favour of the natives of this town; and through their patronage numbers of young gentlemen, of good family and education, entered the service of the East India Company, and, as soldiers, sailors, and civilians, acquired both fame and fortune: a few of these died in middle life, after bettering in various ways the circumstances of friends and relatives at home; but the majority returned to their native district—purchased land, planned, built, planted and improved—happy themselves, and diffusing the means of happiness within their respective localities. Others, again, have been equally fortunate in the West Indies, America, Liverpool and London; and, drawing rather a narrow circle around Dumfries,' (the writer speaks with the fact when he says) 'there are individuals who possess among them tangible property closely verging on one million sterling.'

A spirit of improvement has been shown by the inhabitants, assisted by the commissioners of police, in numerous alterations, public structures, &c., amongst which may be named the erection of a new suite of assembly-rooms, new market-places, the widening of Bank-street, and lighting the town with gas; a spacious quay has been constructed along the side of the town; and a fine Doric column, raised by the county of Dumfries to the memory of the late Duke of Queensberry, adorns the centre of the bugh. The Court-House is a large elegant edifice, comprising a very spacious court-room and other offices; nearly opposite stands the gaol, whence the prisoners are conveyed for trial through a subterraneous passage which communicates with the court-room. Courts are held in April and September for Dumfries-shire and the stewartry of Kirkcudbright; there are also a small debt, sheriff and borough courts. The Theatre is rather a handsome building of stone, with a projecting portico; the interior, which is tastefully decorated, is lighted with gas: it is generally open a few weeks in the winter. It was here that Keat first evinced his dawning talents; to the last, that great actor never forgot the attention paid to him in early life in Dumfries. There are three subscription reading and news rooms, supplied with London and provincial papers, magazines, &c. (the principal one has an excellent billiard table); one library supported by subscription, and also a law library. A coursing club has two meetings during the summer; races are held in October, and the Caledonian Hunt once in five years. As already observed, a variety of ancient customs, formerly upheld in Dumfries, are now relinquished; but one, called 'shooting for the silver gun,' still exists, and is celebrated with great enthusiasm. The silver gun, which is still preserved, derives great importance from being the gift of James VI. of Scotland, who ordained it as a prize to the best marksman among the incorporations of Dumfries: the contest was by royal authority to take place every year; but, from the great trouble and expense, it has become a 'once in seven years' jubilee, and the birth-day of the reigning monarch is that invariably chosen for the celebration: the last festival occurred a few years ago; and, considering the changes that have operated within the ranks of the ancient corporations, it is a matter of considerable doubt whether this usage of the olden time will ever be revived.

The commercial advantages of Dumfries have been much increased by obtaining an act of parliament empowering a certain number of commissioners to be annually appointed to conduct the shipping business of the river, since which period great and important improvements have been effected: the dangerous sandbanks in the Solway Frith have been rendered comparatively safe, by judiciously placing buoys in the Scotch and English channels; many permanent obstructions have been removed; the river Nith has been confined by solid embankments and stone jetties; new cuts have been made, where necessary; and at present most of the vessels, which were formerly obliged to unload at a considerable distance down the river, may discharge their cargoes close to the town. The principal imports are timber, hemp, tallow, coals, slate, iron, and wine; the exports consist of wheat, barley, oats, potatoes, wool, and freestone. Considerable business is done in the manufacture of hosiery (lamb's wool to a very great extent), hat-making, breweries, tan-yards, and the glue manufactory; the amount is not under £100,000 sterling. Dumfries was for many years the leading market for hare-skins in Scotland, and even regulated the price of home fur in England; and it is still looked to as the arbiter of prices. The trade of the town and district is assisted by branches of the 'Bank of Scotland,' the 'National Bank of Scotland,' the 'Commercial Bank of Scotland,' and the 'British Linen Company.' The principal inns are the 'King's Arms,' the 'George,' and the 'Commercial;' they are all highly respectable establishments; the latter attracts notice from the circumstance of its having been the temporary head-quarters of the Pretender, in 1745. Three weekly newspapers are published, two of which are issued on Tuesday, and the third on Friday; their names are, the 'Dumfries Courier,' the 'Dumfries Times,' and the 'Dumfries Herald;' the 'Courier' has existed twenty-seven years, the 'Times' upwards of three, and the 'Herald' more than one year.

The municipal government is vested in a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, two town clerks, and twelve councillors, to whom the entire jurisdiction of the burgh is confided. Until a recent period, the craftsmen were divided into seven corporations, with each a deacon chosen from their respective trades, who elected one of their own number to be convener, and another to be general box-master; all of whom formed what was termed a grand committee of the seven trades: these distinctions, however (for distinctions of considerable importance they were in former times), were virtually abolished by the reform bill; some of the trades possessed considerable property, which has since been publicly sold, and the proceeds equitably divided among the respective parties. Dumfries unites with Annan, Lockmaben, and Sanquhar, in returning one member to parliament.

THE PLACES OF WORSHIP consist of two churches of the establishment; a relief chapel, two united secessional, an episcopal, a Roman catholic, and a methodist; and a reformed presbyterian, or Cameronian meeting-house, opened in 1832: it was erected at an expense of £750; its site is well chosen, in an agreeable part of the town. Opposite to this edifice is the congregational chapel, opened in August 1834, and built at the cost of £700; it is the property of a respectable body of individuals, who, in common with their brethren in England and Scotland, formerly assumed the name of independents. St. Michael's, or the parish church, claims peculiar notice, on account of its cemetery, which contains numerous elegant and curious monuments, many of them very ancient; but the most attractive is the fine mausoleum raised to the memory of the Scottish bard, Burns. By the erection of this monument it may be said that Scotland has repaid the debt so long due to the memory of him of whose natural genius his countrymen may well be proud; but while as Scotsmen they justly exult that it was reserved for their country to give birth to such a poet, the hard fate of Burns while living, and the comparative obscurity in which he closed his days, prove also that he was not sufficiently valued in life. Burns died at Dumfries on the 21st July, 1796, aged 37 years, and his remains were deposited in the church-yard of St. Michael's; but it was some time before even a stone was placed over the sod that covered the ashes of departed genius—and this was but a plain memento, reared by a widow's affections, and bedewed with a widow's tears. It was not until 1813 that any worthy or decisive plan was adopted; and it was then chiefly owing to the indefatigable perseverance of William Grierson, Esq., of this town, that a public meeting was convened, on the 6th of January, 1814, at which General Dunlop, M.P., presided. A public subscription was immediately commenced, the amount of which soon proved that it only wanted a spark to kindle into a flame the generous sentiment of paying due honour to the inspired talent of their immortal countryman; his late Majesty, then Prince Regent, graciously sent a donation of fifty guineas. The design of the mausoleum was furnished by Thos. F. Hunt, Esq., of London; and a model by Peter Turnerell, Esq., was chosen for the marble sculpture to be placed in the interior. The subject is happily taken from words which occur in the dedication of an early edition of the bard's own poems to the noblemen and gentlemen of the Caledonian Hunt:—'The poetic genius of my country found me, as the prophetic bard Elijah did Elisha, at the plough, and threw her inspiring mantle over me.' The foundation-stone was laid 5th June, 1815, and the body removed from the place in which it was originally interred on the 19th September following. It is surrounded with handsome iron palisades and evergreens, which add highly to the melancholy beauty of its appearance. The whole expense amounted to about £1,500., and it certainly is a cemetery worthy of Caledonia's inimitable bard—

'Where still that fresh, that forgotten name Shall pay the arrear of monumental fame,
As oft the traveller, oft the poet, turns
To muse, and linger o'er the grave of Burns.'

With a desire to do further honour to the memory of Burns, a number of gentlemen have formed themselves into a club, and meet annually to celebrate his natal day. Of the family of the poet, three sons still survive:—Robert, the eldest, aged 50, who served twenty years in the legacy-duty department of the stamp-office, Somerset-house, London, and who now resides in his native town on a retired allowance; William, the second, stationed at Madras, is captain and assistant commissary-general in the East India Company's service; and James Glencairn Burns, also a captain in the same service, and lately appointed superintendent of Upper and Lower Cacher.

CHARITABLE, EDUCATIONAL AND SCIENTIFIC INSTITUTIONS.—The Infirmity was founded in 1776, at a period when very few charities, of a similar nature, were in Britain; and this is still the only one in the South of Scotland. Medical advice and medicines are gratuitously afforded to every applicant who is an object of charity. It is supported by annual subscriptions, legacies, donations, benefactions, &c. and is under the management of governors. There is also a Lunatic Asylum connected with it.—The Poors' Hospital is for the purpose of supporting aged and indigent poor, and destitute children, who are taught to read and write. It is governed by the magistrates, town council, &c. and it is supported by a part of the collections from the church doors, numerous benefactions, donations and annual subscriptions. The health, morals, and comfort of its poor inmates are studied with the greatest care. It was founded, in 1753, by Messrs. J. and W. Moorhead, merchants. Dumfries also contains a society for promoting education in the Highlands, a missionary society, a society for promoting Christianity amongst the Jews, a Bible society, a local Sabbath school society, an infants' school, a ladies' free school, a juvenile society, a branch of the Scottish missionary society, and a penny a week Bible and missionary society.—The Academy. This elegant and useful seminary was founded in 1802, on one of the most delightful and healthy situations to be found in the town or neighbourhood. The expenses of the ground, and of building and finishing the fabric, were entirely defrayed by voluntary subscription. A committee of management having been chosen by a general meeting of the subscribers, the whole operations were carried into execution under their superintendence, and, in October, 1814, the structure was formally delivered over to the magistrates, as patrons and guardians of the institution, who, along with other members of the town council, have the exclusive privilege of appointing the masters.

Dumfries and Maxwelltown Astronomical Society.—This society, which is of recent formation, have erected, on Corbely hill, on the Maxwelltown side of the river, an observatory, which is regarded as a highly ornamental feature in one of the most unique half-city, half-sylvan landscapes: it commands an extensive view of beautiful and varied scenery: the cost exceeded 1,000 guineas, which was raised in £5. shares. The plans were by Mr. Newall, architect, and the building was completed in little more than twelve months. It contains four stories,—the lower one for the use of the keeper; three others for the accommodation of the subscribers and strangers, which are furnished with globes, mathematical instruments, newspapers, and periodicals; the upper story is set apart for a camera obscura and prism. The observatory is seen from a great distance: the grounds, which consist of more than half an acre, are laid out with much taste, containing flowers and shrubs of various kinds. The management consists of Mr. R. Thomson, treasurer, and Mr. John Jackson, secretary.

MARKETS AND FAIRS.—The market days are Wednesdays. The two principal half yearly markets take the name of the Candlemas and rood fairs. Until very lately about 30,000 head of black cattle were sold for the markets of the south alone, independently of much inferior stock, which merely passed from the keeping of one farmer to another; of the heavy stock in good years the value was nearly £300,000. sterling; but the trade has declined, and must still decline, as regards the Norwich and other markets. The facilities afforded by steam navigation, and the spread of turnip husbandry, induce farmers to feed a portion of their stock fat, which was formerly sent to Norfolk, and there fattened for the London markets: independently of this, great numbers of sheep are fattened on turnips from November till April, a practice very little known previous to 1822. Vast quantities of pork are sold in Dumfries from the beginning of December to the end of February; the trade is strictly a ready money one, and repeatedly four, five, and six thousand pounds have been paid and received for this commodity before breakfast on a Wednesday morning. The fairs are the first Wednesday in February, the third Wednesday in March, the third Wednesday in April, 26th May or Wednesday afterwards, third Wednesday in June, the third Wednesday in July, third Wednesday in August, third Wednesday in October, 22d or Wednesday afterwards in November, and third Wednesday in November, for cattle (all old style).

MAXWELLTOWN, formerly a village, is now a burgh of barony, in the stewartry of Kirkcudbright, and connected with Dumfries by two bridges across the Nith. In no instance have the good effects of erecting a village into a burgh of barony been more conspicuous than in Maxwelltown. The charter was obtained from the crown in 1810, and since that time, from being a poor village, notorious for disorderly conduct,—(for it was a remark of the late Sir John Fielding, that he could trace a rogue over the whole kingdom, but always lost him at the bridge-end of Dumfries, now Maxwelltown, or in the Gorbals of Glasgow),—it has improved in value and extent of houses, and increased considerably in the number and respectability of its inhabitants: it is governed by a provost, two bailies, and councillors. A new church was erected here in 1829 by subscription; it is a neat edifice, and its site well chosen. Maxwelltown also possesses warm and cold baths, as well as two breweries and two iron foundries.

DUNSCORE, HOLYWOOD AND KIRKMAHOE.

DUNSCORE, a parish in the district of Nithsdale, is bounded by Glencairn and Keir on the north, and Holywood and Kirkcudbrightshire on the south. It is twelve miles in length, and its breadth varies from one to four miles: the land is arable on the banks of the Nith, which irrigates its eastern part; it is also intersected by the Cairn. Sheep and black cattle are reared off these lands, for the southern markets; and oats, barley, wheat, potatoes, and turnips, are produced in great quantities. The kirk of the parish is about nine miles from Dumfries, and seven from Minniehive. Robert Burns, at one time, held a farm in this parish, near the Nith, named Friars' carse; and it was while here that he had an opportunity of eulogizing the Cluden River, which is a continuation of the Cairn water. At this period he took charge of a village library, instituted by his landlord, Robert Riddell, Esq. HOLYWOOD parish, which is bounded by Dunscore on the north and west, extends for ten miles along the right bank of the Nith, its breadth being from two to three miles. The church, an exceedingly neat erection, and much admired, stands in a most delightful part of the country, about three miles from Dumfries. In the church-yard are vestiges of an old abbey, supposed to have been built in the twelfth century.

 KIRKMAHOE is a small modern village in the parish of its name, and district of Nithsdale, five miles from Dumfries, situate on a rivulet, tributary to the Nith, near the southern extremity of the parish. The church is a handsome gothic edifice of recent erection. The lands of the parish are well cultivated, and there are several plantations.

ECCLEFECHAN,

WITH THE VILLAGE OF WATERBECK IN MIDDLEBIE AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ECCLEFECHAN is a considerable and thriving village, in the parish of Hoddam, 71 miles s. of Edin-burgh, 76 s. e. of Glasgow, 18 n. w. of Carlisle, 16 e. of Dumfries, and 6 n. of Annan; lying in a fine situ-ation, near the foot of Annaudale, and on the mail road from Glasgow to Carlisle; which great line of thoroughfare has undergone vast improvement within the last few years, particularly in the vicinity of this village. The land of Hoddam parish is of the very best quality, under a superior system of cultivation, and the district is perhaps one of the most healthy and pleasant in the south of Scotland. The principal employment of the inhabitants is weaving cotton goods for the Carlisle manufacturers, who have con-stantly a demand for the labours of the loom, and which enables the operatives to enjoy many comforts which they would otherwise be deprived of. Eccle-fechan contains many respectable shops, in which a variety of trades is carried on, the prosperity of which is mainly sustained by the extensive cattle markets, for which this village has been so long noted. These great marts are held on the first Fridays after the 11th in the months of January, February, March, April, and

July; the Friday before the 26th of August, the 18th of September (or the Friday before), the 26th of Oc-ber, the Friday after the 11th of November, and the Friday after the 11th of December. The first Friday after the 11th of May and the 26th of October are hiring days for servants, the latter being also a cattle market; and the first Tuesday after the 11th of June is a fair for cattle and general merchandise. On the two fair days in June and October, the Duke of Buccleugh, as superior, claims certain customs for all standings, and for all cattle exposed for sale.

MIDDLEBIE is a village in the parish of its name, situate on the road between Langholm & Ecclefechan, twelve miles from the former, and two from the latter place. The parish, which is about seven miles in length by four in breadth, abounds in red freestone, and is valuable for its fine quarries; but much of the land is of rather poor quality.

WATERBECK village, in the above parish, is two miles from Middlebie, on the road to Langholm. It is a pretty little rural place, and has been greatly improved and almost the whole of it re-built by Mr. Robert Carlyle, the proprietor.

LANGHOLM,

AND THE PARISHES OF CANONBIE, ESKDALEMUIR, EWES, WESTERKIRK & NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LANGHOLM is a thriving market town and burgh of barony, in the parish of its name; 70 miles s. of Edinburgh, 80 s. w. of Glasgow, 30 e. by n. of Dumfries, the like distance s. e. of Moffat, 21 n. of Carlisle, 18 n. e. of Annan, and 12 n. of Longtown (in Cumberland); delightfully situate on the left or east bank of the Esk, over which there is a stone bridge of three arches. The town owes its origin to a border house or tower, which was formerly the property of the all-powerful Armstrongs, but is now only seen in a state of ruin. The curious stranger may also direct his observation here to a spot where several witches suffered in the century before last: the witches of Eskdale are said to have played pranks beyond all example in the annals of female necromancy; some of them occupied themselves in the obstetric art, and upon those occasions transferred the pains of parturition from the 'gude-wife' to her husband. Langholm was long famed for an ingeniously formed iron instrument, called the 'branks,' which fitted upon the head of a shrewish female, and, projecting a sharp spike into her mouth, fairly subdued the more annoying weapon within; this instrument was deemed more effectual than the ducking (or cucking) stool, used in some parts of England, as the latter permitted liberty to the unruly member between every dip. The author of the 'Picture of Scotland' says—'Eskdale derives more than common charm from the memory of Johnnie Armstrong, whose name is associated with many of its localities; his tower of Gilnockie still stands, though converted into a cow-house, a few miles below Langholm, on the left bank of the Esk. It was on 'Langholm Holm' that, when going to meet the king, he and his 'gallant companie' of thirty-six men 'ran their horse and brak' their spears.' Johnnie terminated his mortal career at Carlenrig, a place not far distant from Moss-Paul, on the road between Langholm and Hawick: the story of the judicial execution of this border-thief and his companions, by James V, is well known; the graves of the whole of the marauding band are to be seen in a deserted church-yard at Carlenrig. In the present day Langholm does not seem to partake of any of the peculiarities which distinguished the country in the 'riding times,' or in the ages of superstition, being now one of the most thriving towns of its size in Scotland. It is built in the bosom of a lovely woodland scene, along the Edinburgh and Carlisle road; and is composed generally of good stone houses, roofed with blue slate. The bridge connects the ancient town with a more modern suburb on the opposite side of the river, called New Langholm, or New Town. In the market-place of the old town stands the town-hall and jail, ornamented with a neat spire and clock; the burgh is about to be lighted with gas, for which purpose works are now being erected in the old town. The chief trade in Langholm is the manufacture of cotton and woollen goods, as checks, stockings, &c.; it likewise possesses a number of respectable shops, branches of the 'National Bank of Scotland' and of the 'British Linen Company,' a distillery, dyehouses, tanneries, and some excellent inns. The government of the town is vested in a baron bailie, appointed by the Duke of Buccleugh, who is the superior. A court for recovery of debts not exceeding £5. is held every alternate Monday by county justices. The places of worship are the parish church, and relief and united secession chapels. A good parochial school, and one endowed by the late Captain George Maxwell, of Broomholm, are the institutions for instruction; and there are two extensive well supported libraries. The market day is Wednesday; the fairs are held on the 16th April, the last Tuesday in May (old style), 26th July, 18th September, and in November: there are also two hiring days—one in May, the other in November; the July fair is noted as a great one for lambs. CANONBIE (or Canonby) is a village most delightfully situate on the banks of the Esk, half way between Longtown and Langholm, and on the southern border of the county; it is separated from England by the river Liddel, whose romantic banks present some pleasing scenery. This parish is about nine miles long and six broad; the high road from Edinburgh to London runs through the village. The kirk is a very large stone building, calculated to accommodate 1,400 persons. There are inexhaustible mines of coal, and lime-quarries of excellent quality, in the parish, but only a small portion of them wrought. The scenery along the Esk is considered to be the finest in the south of Scotland. The HOLLOWs is a small village, about a mile and a half from Canonbie; near to which, on the east, is Gilkavekil tower, and on the west is Hollows tower. The Duke of Buccleugh is sole proprietor of this parish.

ESKDALEMUIR is a mountainous pastoral parish, on the north-eastern border of the county, and in the district of Eskdale; the manse, which is about the centre of the parish, is fourteen miles from Langholm. A very small portion of Eskdalemuir is under cultivation; the principal land proprietor is the Duke of Buccleugh.

The parish of EWES, situate on the eastern extremity of the county, is remarkable for its beautiful ranges of green hills, covered with verdure to their summits, and the clearness of the river, which affords excellent trouting. Numerous plantations, on the properties of the Duke of Buccleugh and Mr. Beattie (of Meikledale), add additional beauty to the lovely appearance of the sweet dale of the Ewes.

WESTERKIRK parish is also situate near the eastern boundary of the county, about six miles from Langholm. Nearly the whole of this portion of the district is devoted to pasture for sheep and black cattle; but there are several elegant villas, which in some degree relieve its otherwise monotonous appearance. The church stands on the left bank of the river Esk. Sir Robert Walpole was a native of this parish.

LOCHMABEN,

WITH THE PARISHES OF TINWALD AND TORTHORWOLD, AND THE VILLAGES OF COLLIN, ROUCAN AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LOCHMABEN is a town of considerable antiquity, a royal burgh, the seat of presbytery, and capital of the parish of its name, 65 miles s. of Edinburgh, 70
 s. e. of Glasgow, 33 s. e. of Sanquhar, 30 n. w. of Carlisle, 21 s. e. of Thornhill, the like distance w. of Langholm, 15 s. of Moffat, 13 n. w. of Annan, 10 w. n. w.
 of Ecclefechan, 8 n. by e. of Dumfries, and 4 w. of Lockerbie; situate in a level country, surrounded by a beautiful amphitheatre of hills, and by all the charms which wood and water can bestow. It traces its origin to a very early age, and derives its name from the loch on which it is so delightfully placed, the word Lochmaben signifying, in the Scots-Irish, the lake on the white plain. The loch, which is about three miles in circumference, abounds with several sorts of fish—among others the vendace (or vendise), which is peculiar to these waters, and is said not to be met with any where else in Britain. The town owes its rise to the protection of a castle of vast strength, which was built by Robert Bruce, lord of Annandale, and was the chief residence of the Bruces till the end of the thirteenth century. It stood on the north-west of the lake, which was called the Castle Loch, and the castle was surrounded by a deep moat. This ancient castle was succeeded by a much larger fortress, built on a peninsula on the south-east side of the loch. This edifice, with its outworks, covered about 16 acres;

 after different grants to various relations of the Bruces, it was annexed, by parliament, in 1487, to the crown. Some of the walls still exist; they are of great thickness, and, with the melancholy firs which mingle with them, present a gloomy yet interesting mass of ruins. The period of the first erection of Lochmaben into a royal burgh is of too remote a date for conjecture; its present charter was granted by James VI, and bears date 16th of July, 1612, from which it appears that the town was more than once destroyed and burnt during the civil wars, its public edifices plundered, and its ancient records, &c. totally lost; but although the whole of the former privileges have been regained, the place itself has never recovered its former consequence. The municipal government is vested in a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, and treasurer, all of whom are chosen out of fifteen councillors. The burgh unites with Dumfries, Annan, and Saughbar, in returning one member to parliament. The town-house, with its tower and clock, stands at the end of the principal street. A subscription library affords literary and other information to the gentlemen by whom it is supported, and there are free masons lodges and a savings' bank; but it is a place of narrow trade, and, with the exception of a few stockings that are made, is unconnected with manufactures; it is, in fact, a rural town, solely dependant upon its own resources.

The parish church is a handsome and convenient building in the pointed style, with a bold square tower, in which are two well-toned bells. The first stone was laid on the 10th of April, 1818, and the church was opened for divine worship in July, 1820. The expense of its erection amounted to about £3,000: it contains sittings for 1,200 persons, but is capable of holding 1,400. There is also a chapel for the united secession congregation and one for the Cameronians. The market is, during the winter months, every fortnight, for the sale of pork, &c. but fairs are held on the first Tuesdays of January, April, July, and October, all old style.

The small village of TINWALD, which is situate about six miles from Lochmaben, was the birth-place of Paterson, the projector of the Bank of England, and the planner of the disastrous Darien expedition. The parish is of a triangular figure, each side of which is about four miles and a half in length; its northern boundary is watered by the pleasant river Ae. The greater part of the parish is arable: within its precincts, five miles from Dumfries, is Amisfield Castle, the seat of the ancient family of Charteris.

The parish of TORTHORWOLD lies near the foot of Nithsdale, and is bounded by Tinwald on the north, by Lochmaben and Mouswald on the east, and separated on the west from Dumfries parish by the Lochar water. It extends six miles in length from north to south, by a breadth, at the northern extremity, of about two miles and a half, tapering to a point on the south. The village, which is situate in the north of the parish, is about four miles from Lochmaben, and the like distance from Dumfries. In the vicinity of the village are the ruins of the ancient castle of Torthorwold, supposed to have existed since the thirteenth century. On the road between Dumfries and Annan is COLLIN, and near the parish church is ROUCAN, both villages belonging to this parish.

LOCKERBIE,

AND THE PARISHES OF DRYFESDALE, ST. MUNGO, TUNDERGARTH AND APPEGARTH.

LOCKERBIE is a neat small market town, in the parish of Dryfesdale, 65 miles s. of Edinburgh, 12 n.e. of Dumfries, 11 n.w. of Annan, 6 n.w. of Ecclefechan, and 4 e. of Lochmaben; situate on the great mail road betwixt Glasgow and Carlisle, 72 miles s.e. of the former, and 26 n.w. of the latter city. The town occupies a considerable space of ground; the buildings have a regular and clean appearance, and the surrounding country presents some fine scenery. The origin of this place is remote, and probably, for a long period, its character was only that of a small hamlet, attached to and protected by the residence or strong-hold of a family of some power. It is within the last century that improvements have manifested themselves to some extent, which may be mainly ascribed to the liberality of the proprietors, who have granted long terms to the tenants on their estates. Manufactures have not made their appearance in Lockerbie, but the trade in articles of general and domestic consumption is good, and progressively augmenting with the increasing prosperity of its fairs and public markets. A branch of the Western Bank of Scotland is settled here; and there are two good inns: a bank for savings, established in 1824, has been eminently successful.

The parish church stands about thirty yards off the High-street, and is centrally placed in relation to the parish generally, the extreme points not being at a greater distance than three miles and a half. It has lately undergone repair and received considerable addition, which renders it a neat and commodious edifice. The chapel, belonging to the united associate congregation, is also a convenient building. There is a female society for the relief of the occasional poor, a masonic lodge, and two libraries—one parochial, the other circulating.

The market is held on Thursday, and from the commencement of October till the end of April it is extensively supplied with pork, at which there is sometimes sold, in a single day, from £1,000, to £2,000, worth; there is also a market for hiring of servants on the second Thursday of October, old style. Fairs are held on the second Thursdays in January, February, March, April, and May, the third Thursday in June, and the second Thursday in August, all old style; the last fair, which is for lambs, is the largest and last lamb fair in Scotland—the number of lambs on the ground being, in some years, from 30 to 40,000; a new one (established for the sale of cattle) in September, the second Thursday in October for cattle and horses, the second Thursday in November, and the Thursday before Christmas, all old style. These fairs add much to the prosperity of the town, being well attended; the new one in September takes place the Thursday before the large fair on Brough Hill, and is likely to become considerable. Lockerbie contains 264 houses, and about 1,500 inhabitants.

DRYFESDALE parish is in the district of Annandale, the extreme length from north-east to south-west is about seven miles; the average breadth of the upper part is about three miles, and of the lower half about one and a half; about two-thirds of the parish is low land, and the rest is hilly. There is also a considerable extent of holm land towards the junction of the Annan and the Dryfe. Of the whole extent of 10,000 acres in this parish, about 8,000 are either cultivated or have occasionally been in tillage, the remainder remaining in moor and pasturage. The point which assumes the greatest height is Whitewoolen hill, the elevation of which is 650 feet above the level of the sea.

ST. MUNGO is in the district of Annandale, through which the road to Glasgow and Carlisle passes, and at a short distance from the villages of Ecclefechan and Lockerbie. Castlemilk, the residence of Major Hart, is one of the most beautiful mansions in this part of Scotland, being romantically situated in the midst of pleasure grounds, and in the bosom of a fine valley.

TUNDERGARTH is a parish in which a great number of sheep are pastured, and is separated from that of St. Mungo's on the west, is nearly 13 miles in length, by a breadth of only about two miles at its widest part. The old castle, now in ruins, is deserving of notice, as it was formerly the residence of the Marquesses of Annandale. The conspicuous hill, called Brunswark, overlooks the district from the south.

APPEGARTH (or Applegirth) is a parish in the presbytery of Lochmaben; in length northwards it extends nearly five miles and a half, and its breadth eastward is nearly the same. It is bounded by Wamphray on the north-east, by Hutton on the east, by Johnstone and Lochmaben on the west, and by Dryfesdale on the south. The village lies on the banks of the Annan, about eleven miles from Dumfries.

MOFFAT,

WITH THE PARISHES OF JOHNSTONE, KIRKPATRICK JUXTA AND WAMPFRAY.

MOFFAT is an interesting and genteel small town, in the parish of its name, and district of Annandale; 51 miles s. of Edinburgh, 21 n. of Dumfries, and 16 n. n. w. of Lockerbie; pleasantly situate upon rising ground gently declining towards the south, immediately at the foot of a chain of mountains, which form the northern boundaries of Dumfries-shire with the adjacent counties of Lanark, Peebles, and Selkirk, and which completely environ it on the west, north, and east: the huge summits of this elevated region reach to various altitudes; some covered with wood—others beautifully chequered and skirted with plantations of unequal size, and natural clumps of birch, oak, and mountain ash, affording shelter and inclosure to the intervening grounds, which are partly cultivated and partly in pasture. The principal street of the town (High-street) is wide and spacious, and laid down upon the principle recommended by the late Mr. M'Adam—exceedingly smooth, clean and dry, even within a few minutes after the heaviest fall of rain; it commands an extensive and fine prospect of a delightful valley, stretching towards the south, interspersed with hedge-rows, meadows and corn-fields, and pleasingly diversified by the windings of the river Annan, which first makes its appearance in an extraordinary ravine in this district, and runs at the distance of about two hundred yards from the town; the surrounding plantations, every year increasing in extent and beauty, are within view from the street. The houses are modern and commodious, admirably suited to accommodate visitors; there are several excellent inns, and an eminent and well supported academy and boarding-school. Moffat has long and justly been celebrated as a fashionable summer resort, and for the medicinal virtues of its mineral waters. The springs are three in number, one sulphureous and two chalybeate; the sulphureous spring is distinguished by the name of 'Moffat well,' and is about a mile from the town, a very good carriage-road leading to it, and a room with other conveniences upon the spot, for the use of the company while drinking the waters; there are likewise well-frequented bath-rooms in the town, to which the water is conveyed in leaden pipes. It is now upwards of two hundred years since the discovery of the valuable qualities of this spring, during which time it has been much frequented from all parts of Scotland, the northern counties of England, and in some instances from Ireland. In all scrofulous and scorbutic cases it is a powerful remedy, being seldom known to prove ineffectual when the lungs were not diseased; in the removal of bilious complaints, also, it is eminently successful, as well as in creating appetite and promoting digestion; and it is an excellent specific for gravel and rheumatism: it sparkles in the glass like champagne, but is so volatile that it can be drunk in perfection only at the fountain. Hartfell spa was first discovered in the year 1748, by a man named John Williamson: it issues from a rock of alum slate, in the side of Hartfell mountain, near Moffat; it may be carried to any distance, and will keep for years; it is a potent restorative, highly beneficial in all complaints peculiar to the fair sex, and may be advantageously used as a wash in the healing of obstinate cutaneous eruptions. The other chalybeate is of a peculiar nature, and obtained in a very curious manner, viz. by pouring water upon a rock in the side of a savage dell, called 'Gartpool Linn,' in the vicinity of the town: the surface of this rock is strongly impregnated with sulphat of alumina and iron; the water is much stronger than that of Hartfell, and consequently is taken in smaller portions—not more than a wine-glass full at a time. About four miles north-west from hence there is a petrifying spring, and there are others that do not attract so much notice. To the antiquary the neighbourhood of Moffat presents many objects of gratification, and to these are attached traditions worthy of attention, but too numerous and prolix for detail in a work like the present. The celebrated road-maker, John Loudon M'Adam, died in this town on the 26th November, 1836, in his eighty-first year: he was a native of Ayrshire, but was much attached to the locality of Moffat, where he spent a great portion of his early life; he has left a widow, and two or more sons by his first marriage, upon one of whom was conferred the honour of knighthood, which his father had declined on account of his age and growing infirmities. Mr. M'Adam received from government £10,000, in two separate instalments; to his credit it is recorded that, during the whole career of his honourable independent service, he never contracted for works, deeming such a method of acquiring wealth incompatible with the duties of an engineer.

The parish and town of Moffat derive their name from the principal stream, the vale of which is deep, and of a very romantic and pastoral character; it was formerly densely wooded, and must, therefore, have well accorded with the appellation it received—Moffat being a corruption of Oud-vat, which signifies, translated from the Gaelic, 'the long deep mountain hollow.' The parish is the highest in the entire district of Annandale; its greatest length is about fifteen miles, and its breadth from eight to nine. The different rivers supply abundance of amusement to the trout-angler; and the celebrated alpine lake, Lochakeen (whose elevation is upwards of one thousand feet above the level of the sea), contains the finest species of that fish in the south of Scotland. The outlet of the waters of this lake is by the lofty and magnificent cascade called the 'Grey Mare's Tail,' tumbling over precipitous rocks, computed to be about four hundred feet above the level of the vale, and which appears, from the opposite side of the glen, to be one unbroken fall. The population of the parish, in 1836, was 2,265; and the village contained 1,400 of that number.

The parish of KIRKPATRICK JUXTA derives its name from its vicinity to a chapel formerly dedicated to the famous mis-tionary, meaning 'the lauds high to the kirk of St. Patrick;' it is situate in the upper district of Annandale—bounded on the north by Moffat, and on the east by Wamphray. The celebrated Gartell Linn is in this parish; likewise the castle of Auchincass, the ruins of which cover a considerable extent of ground: it was erected by Randolph, Earl of Murray, during the minority of David 'the Bruce,' and subsequently was in the possession of Douglas of Morton: its antiquity, therefore, is unquestionable; the old tower of Lochhouse is supposed to have been rebuilt by James Johnstone, of Corehead, chamberlain to Bishop Whiteford, of Brechin, whose daughter the chamberlain married, and with her obtained possession of the extensive lands belonging to the bishop in Kirkpatrick Juxta and Moffat. There are other ruins of ancient edifices, which excite some interest and are worthy of survey. The summer residence of William Younger, Esq., Craigland, is the only modern mansion of any note in the parish, with the exception of the Beacock Inn, about a mile and three quarters from Moffat. About one-third of the land is under tillage; the larger portion is unimproved and pasture.

JOHNSTONE parish is in the district of Annandale, adjoining Kirkpatrick Juxta; it is six miles in length and three in breadth. The remains of Lochwood tower, situate at the northern end of the parish, in the centre of a venerable and picturesque wood, and surrounded by impassable bogs, are the only vestiges of antiquity, sufficiently interesting to attract attention, in the parish: regarding the (now unknown) personage by whose order it was originally erected, James VI is recorded to have remarked, that, 'however honest he might have been in outward appearance, he must have been a rogue at heart;' Robert, natural brother to the chieftain Lord John Maxwell, of Nithsdale, burnt it down with savage glee in the sixteenth century. John Hope Johnston, Esq., of Raehills, M.P. for the county, is proprietor, and occupies an elegant mansion, the only notable residence in the parish. There is nothing peculiar to be observed respecting this local portion of the district, further than that (on the authority of the present reverend minister,) 'in this populous rural parish there is neither public-house nor meeting-house, nor resident surgeon nor village, nor post-office nor prison, nor lawyer nor beggar.'

The parish of WAMPFRAY received its name from its situation, emphatically expressed by the Gaelic word Uamh-fri, signifying 'the den in the forest.' Agreeably to this etymology, the church stands in a deep woody recess, by the side of Wamphray water, which brawls and thunders its way through a most romantic and picturesque glen, formed on both sides either by high steep banks, clad with thriving plantations—or by lofty basaltic columns, mantled with ivy, and sportively adorned by saplings of ash rising from their interstices. This parish adjoins Kirkpatrick and Johnstone; it is of an oblong figure, six miles and a half in length by three in breadth. There are but four resident proprietors.

SANQUHAR,

WITH THE VILLAGE OF KIRKCONNEL AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

SANQUHAR is an ancient town and burgh of barony, in the parish of its name, and district of Nithsdale, 56 miles s. s. w. of Edinburgh, the like distance n. by e. of Glasgow, 32 e. s. e. of Ayr, and rather more than 26 n. w. of Dumfries; situate on the line of road, up the left bank of the Nith, passing from this county into that of Ayr. The town, it is supposed, owes its origin to a castle of considerable importance, the ruins of which are now to be seen at a short distance to the south-east, on a high bank overlooking the river Nith. It must have been a building of great strength, having towers at the angles, and was surrounded by a ditch. It formerly belonged to a branch of the family of Creighton (or Crichton), ancestors to the Earl of Dumfries. The castle, as well as greater part of the land in the neighbourhood, is now the property of the Duke of Buccleugh. About a mile from it stands the house of Elicock, the residence of the family of Veitch, which gave a senator to the college of justice in the last century; this mansion lays claim (which is disputed by some authorities) to the honour of being the birthplace of the 'admirable Crichton.' Sanquhar consists chiefly of one main street. The family of Queensberry has been great patrons of this town, particularly in improvements on the roads which pass through or approach to it. The late duke also erected the town-hall, at his sole expense; it stands at the end of High-street, and has a tower, with a clock. Sanquhar is the principal coal mart in the county, and large quantities are supplied to Dumfries and other parts. In this parish, as well as that of Kirkconnel, the seams of this article of fuel are most valuable; the field extends seven miles in length and two and a half in breadth, and the veins are from three feet eight inches to four feet six inches in depth. The Duke of Buccleugh is the chief proprietor. At the eastern extremity of the parish, about nine miles from the town, are the valuable lead mines of WANLOCKHEAD, belonging likewise to the noblemen before mentioned. They are said to have been discovered, in the minority of James VI, by some Germans, who were employed in searching for gold about this spot. At the present period employment, by these works, is furnished to upwards of 200 miners, artisans and others. At the village of CRAWICK MILL, half a mile north-west of the town, on the banks of the Crawick stream, is a considerable manufactory for carpets, in which upwards of sixty men, forty women, and a number of children of both sexes are employed; and from the looms in the town about 20,000 yards of tartan cloth are produced annually for the Carpet Company. There are also about 100 cotton weavers employed by the Glasgow manufacturers, and upwards of 300 females of the neighbourhood are occupied in embroidering muslins for the same market. In the town is a large manufactory for spades, shovels, and other agricultural implements. A branch of the British Linen Company's bank is settled here, and there is one for savings.

Sanquhar was erected into a burgh of barony in 1484, and advanced to the dignity of a royal burgh, by charter from James VI, in 1596. It is governed by a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, and eleven councillors, and, in connexion with Dumfries, Annan, and Lochmaben, it sends one member to parliament.

The places of worship, in the town, are the parish church and two secession chapels. The present church, which was erected in 1823, on the site of the old one, is a very handsome edifice, with a square tower, and stands on elevated ground at the west end of the town. At Wanlockhead is a chapel, in connexion with the establishment, for the accommodation of the miners and others employed in the lead works. The executors of the late James Crichton, of Friars' carse, in this county, and a native of Sanquhar, have appropriated £2,000. for the purpose of erecting and endowing a free school in Sanquhar: the interest of the money, since it was set apart for this design, has been laid out in purchasing a site for the school, and the surplus, after the building is completed, will be invested for its endowment.

The market, formerly held on Friday, is now discontinued: there are five fairs, four of which are quarterly, and are held on the first Fridays in February, May, August, and November, old style; the fifth, which is of the greatest note, is held on the 17th July, or the first Friday after, and is called the sheep, lamb, and wool fair.

KIRKCONNEL village is four miles from Sanquhar, and eight from New Cunnock; situate on the high road between Dumfries and Glasgow. It contains the parish church and parochial school. The parish, which is bounded by that of Sanquhar on the south and east, is fifteen miles in length and eight in breadth. In it are two mineral springs, one possessing medicinal properties similar in effect to those of Hartfield spa, near Moffat; the other similar to the Kirkland spa, in Galloway. The Duke of Buccleugh is proprietor of nearly the whole of this parish.

THORN HILL,

AND THE PARISHES OF MORTON, DURISDEER, AND PENPONT, THE VILLAGE OF CARRON-BRIDGE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

THORN HILL is a highly respectable and considerable village, in the parish of Morton, 66 miles s. by E. of Glasgow, 48 n. w. of Carlisle, 40 n. e. of Newton Stewart, 31 s. e. of Kilmarnock, 30 n. w. of Annan, the like distance s. e. of Cumnock, 22 n. e. of New Gal-loway, 14 n. w. of Dumfries, 12 s. e. of Sanquhar, and 7½ n. e. of Minniehivie, most delightfully situated upon an eminence on the banks of the Nith, and on the great road from Carlisle to Dumfries and Glasgow. The country around Thornhill is extremely beautiful, the hills bounding in the scene as with an immense wall. The vale of the Nith is here very spacious, and the hills spring suddenly up from the plain, at such a distance, as to suggest no idea of sterility. From the rising grounds, a little way up the hills to the west of the village, the noble massive castle of Drumlanrig, the property of the Duke of Buccleugh, looks down upon the plain. The scenery is also ornamented by Capenoch, the property and residence of Thos. Kirkpatrick, Esq.; Eccles House, that of Lauderdale Maitland, Esq.; Waterside, belonging to the heirs of the late James Hoggan, Esq.; Baijarg Tower, W. F. Arundel, Esq.; Closeburn Hall, C. G. S. Menteth, Esq.; Dabton, Thomas Crichton, Esq.; Holm Hill, Miss Douglas; Nith Bank, the Misses Gorstoun, and Baitford, Wm. Grierson, Esq. The Duke of Buccleugh is sole superior of this thriving village, and since his majority has expended very considerable sums in its improvement. Thornhill formerly ranked as a burgh of barony, and within the last 35 years the ruins of the old gaol were to be seen: the site is now covered by a handsome house, the property of Mr. James Dalziel. The streets are wide and airy: in the centre of the village is a handsome monument or cross (erected by the late Duke of Queensberry), surmounted by the figure of a winged Pegasus, associated with the arms of that noble family. The trade of the village is chiefly of a domestic nature: there are, however, a tannery and a brewery, and it can boast of two of the most respectable and comfortable inns (the George, and Queensberry Arms) that can be met with in the south of Scotland. Thornhill possesses a subscription library, consisting of 400 volumes; a literary and philosophical society; an elegant freemasons' hall, erected in 1834, and two benevolent societies; and, for a place of recreation, a spacious bowling-green and an extensive quaiting ground.

The parish church, which was erected in 1781, is inconveniently situated, as regards the accommodation of the majority of the inhabitants; a new one is, therefore, about to be erected, in a handsome style, contiguous to the village. Fairs are held on the second Tuesdays in the months of February, May, August, and November (old style); and on the last Friday in June; the latter chiefly for hiring reapers and agricultural labourers.

About two miles to the north of Thornhill, on the road to Sanquhar, and seated on the banks of the rivulet from which it derives its first appellation, is the small romantic village of CARRON-BRIDGE: it stands partly in the parish of Morton, and partly in that of Durisdeer, and contains about 160 inhabitants.

The parish of Morton extends from the left bank of the Nith north-eastward to the borders of Lanarkshire, a distance of between six and seven miles by a breadth of about four; it is bounded on the north and north-west by Penpont and Durisdeer, and on the east and south by Closeburn: it is both pastoral and arable, and, where cultivated, is well enclosed and fertile. In addition to the Nith, the Carron and Cample streamlets pass through the parish, nearly the whole of which is the property of the Duke of Buccleugh. Within the district is the large ruin of Morton Castle, the ancient residence of the Earl of that title.

PENPONT parish, which gives name to a presbytery, is an extensive agricultural district, of irregular form and uneven surface, having comparatively little flat or low grounds; the latter description of land lies chiefly upon the verge of the rivers which flow through it. The village is about two miles from Thornhill; the church, which is contiguous to the village, was built in 1782; it underwent a thorough repair in 1834, when a session-house was annexed to it. There are two other places of worship in the parish: one for the relief congregation (erected in 1800), of which the Rev. John Smith is the minister; the other belonging to the reformed presbytery. The stupendous Glenquhagen Craig, rising perpendicularly one thousand feet, and one of the greatest natural wonders in Scotland, is in this parish; there are likewise the remains of Roman encampments, causeways, and a castle. The Duke of Buccleugh is nearly the sole proprietor of this parish. Three hiring markets are annually held here, viz., on the third Tuesdays of March, June, and October.

The parish of DURISDEER is bounded on the south and south-east by Morton, on the north and north-east by the parish of Crawford, on the south and south-west by Penpont, and on the north-west by Sanquhar; it is eight miles in length, and six in breadth. In this parish is Drumlanrig Castle, the splendid and noble residence of the Duke of Buccleugh; it was erected towards the close of the seventeenth century. About a mile above the church the traces of a Roman encampment are obvious. Exclusive of three small properties, the entire parish belongs to His Grace the Duke of Buccleugh.

ELGINSHIRE,

SO designated from the name of its capital—and sometimes MORAYSHIRE, from being the central division of the 'Province of Moray'—is one of the northern counties of Scotland: it is bounded on the north by that branch of the North Sea called the Moray Frith, on the east and south-east by Banffshire, on the south-west by Inverness-shire, and on the west by the latter county and also that of Nairn. The figure of Elginshire is very irregular, being intersected in several places by districts of the counties which form its boundaries; with Nairn it is so intimately connected, that, in speaking of its shape, that small county is not unfrequently included in the description: thus conjoined, the district is somewhat of triangular figure, with the apex pointed inland—and in this quarter partaking of the wild, rocky and mountainous character of the Highlands. The county may be said to comprehend 470 square miles of land, and seven square miles of lakes; of uncultivated land there are about 120,000 acres, and of cultivated nearly 182,000. In ancient times the limits of this county were much more extensive than at present, comprehending all that tract of country which lies between the river Spey on the east, the Beauly on the north-west, and the northern confines of Argyleshire on the south-west. The remains of antiquity are numerous, of which the cathedral of Elgin, the bishop's palace at Spynie, the priory of Pluscardine, the castles of Lochindorb and Dunphail, and the 'dun' of Relugas, are the chief. Of the struggles of the natives with the Danes, who infested the district in former ages, there are various testimonials, such as 'cairns,' monumental pillars, &c. &c. The 'Province of Moray,' anciently so important and extensive, in the present day is without any political distinction, and is divided into the three several shires of Banff, Moray (or Elgin), and Nairn. On the east it is separated from Aberdeenshire by the Deveron; on the west it is bounded by Inverness-shire, and on the north it has the large arm of the sea, designated from it the Moray Frith. So late as the time of Charles I, the Highlanders considered Moray as a sort of neutral land, where every man was at liberty to take his prey. The Province of Moray suffered more, perhaps, than any other district in Scotland by the civil wars. The people were then generally attached to the covenant; and, as Montrose made it one of his principal scenes of action, it is easy to conceive that its peaceable farmers were not permitted to have both their opinions and their goods undisturbed. Montrose, in his descent upon Moray, in 1645, after his victory of Innerlochy, destroyed all the houses of such as did not join his standard, and gave up the towns of Banff, Cullen, and Elgin to indiscriminate pillage.

SOIL, CLIMATE, PRODUCE, &c.—The soil of this county, though less uniform than that of Banffshire, is for the most part a sandy loam—in some places a sandy gravel; considerable tracts are of very fertile clay, and of the most genial mould. The low country may be pictured as a large plain, extending from the Spey westward, between the shore and a range of mountains, for the whole length of the district, nearly forty miles—but of unequal breadth, from about five to twelve miles or more, measured on a straight line from the hills to the shore: this plain, however, is diversified, over its whole extent, by ridges of lower hills, in general nearly parallel to the shore; beyond this are valleys of great fertility and beauty, near the sources of the rivers Spey, Lossie and Findhorn—with the lesser vales along the banks of the tributary streams which pervade the intervening hills. Within the range of the mountain district, the country may be described as chiefly pastoral; the arable land, in most instances, hanging upon the acclivities of the valleys, or stretching out in narrow plains upon the banks of the waters which wind among the hills—the wideness of the valley bearing a relative proportion to the size of the river. The upper part of the county is popularly termed 'the Brae of Moray': it is mountainous and woody, and abounds in beautiful lakes. The agriculture is very spirited, and the land in general yields a higher rent than that of the neighbouring shires. In the lower part of the county, the Earl of Fife, and other proprietors, have formed plantations to so great an extent, that almost every part of the country inaccessible to the plough has been covered with different species of forest trees. A considerable traffic in the export of wood from the forests of Strathspey, by floating it to Garmouth, has been carried on to advantage. Except sandstone, limestone, and marl, no mineral substance of value has been discovered in this district. The greatest attention is paid to the breed and to the feeding of cattle, and the culture of wheat is not so general anywhere northward of the Grampians. Little can be said respecting manufactures: woollen stuffs are made to a small amount, as well as linen yarn; which, together with grain, cattle, salmon, hewn freestone, wood, and whisky, comprehend the principal exports: of the latter—some idea of the extent of trade in this article may be gathered from the fact, that the distilleries, within the Elgin excise collection, pay annually £50,000. to government as duty on spirits. The coast of this district, although within the fifty-eighth degree of north latitude, has ever been distinguished for the mildness of its climate: the harder kinds of fruit—all the varieties of the apple, and almost all of the pear and of the plum—by a little attention may be abundantly produced on every farm; fruits, also, of greater delicacy—the apricot, the nectarine, and the peach—ripen sufficiently on a wall in the open air. With respect to the winds, the most prevailing gales are from the north-west. This part of the country presents no object so elevated as to attract the clouds or to impede their course; and from this cause, it is concluded, falls of snow are comparatively unfrequent, and of small depth, as they are drifted over the subjacent levels, insomuch that the operations of husbandry are but little interrupted by the inclemency of the weather. It is asserted that, in the lower part of Moray, the climate is as warm, and the atmosphere at least as dry, as in any district of Scotland; in the higher quarter, the weather is more mild than in the adjoining county of Banff, at the same distance from the sea-coast—a natural consequence of its local position, the progress of cultivation, and the inherent warmth of the soil.

RIVERS and LAKES.—The principal rivers are the SPEY, the FINDHORN, and the LOSSIE, all flowing in a northerly direction, and each teeming with the finest salmon. There are many delightful lakes, of which LOCH SPYNIE is most deserving notice: it is three miles in length and one in breadth, and appears to have been formerly a firth of the sea, though it is now shut up at the east and west by a long extent of valuable ground; in accordance with this apparency, the land between the lake and the sea still retains the appellation of Ross Isle; and a corroborative proof of the accuracy of the popular designation is exhibited by the sea-shells (particularly those of the oyster) that are found on the margin of the lake, several feet below the surface of the earth. Loch Spynie nourishes several of the aquatic tribes, but none in such abundance as the perch and pike.

Elginshire comprehends sixteen parishes, and eight parts of parishes; it contains two Royal Burghs—ELGIN and FORRES: the former is united with Cullen, Banff, Inverury, Kintore, and Peterhead, in returning one member to parliament; and the COUNTRY, in conjunction with Nairnshire, deputed another representative in the legislature.

DUTHIL, CARR-BRIDGE AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUTHIL, with which is incorporated Rothiemurcus, is a parish lying partly in this county, and partly in that of Inverness; the river Spey is the divisional line here between the two districts, and the river Dullan intersects that part of the parish situate in Moray, for nearly thirteen miles, when it falls into the Spey. Rothiemurcus (now defined as a township), lies between the Cairngorm Mountain and the Spey, a short way further up that river than the greater part of Duthill; jointly they extend in length twenty miles, by a breadth of seventeen. The whole is generally highland in its character; game is plentiful, and there is a considerable quantity of natural wood. The name of Grant is remarkably prevalent in this district. The parish church stands about six miles from Grantown, and 24 from Inveraven. The parish is governed by a baron baillie. CARR-BRIDGE, or, as it is commonly called, the "Bridge of Carr," is a small hamlet in this parish, 19 miles from Kingussie, and 25 from Inverness.

ELGIN,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF LOSSIEMOUTH, BURGHEAD, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ELGIN is a royal burgh, the capital of the shire of its name, and the seat of a presbytery in the synod of Moray; 189 miles n. of Edinburgh by way of Aberdeen, and 153 by way of Brechin and Huntly, 83 n. of Brechin, 64 w. of Aberdeen, 39 n. E. of Inverness, 12 E. by n. of Forres, and 9 w. of Fochabers; pleasantly situate on the right bank of the river Lossie, about five miles above its influx into the Moray Firth at Lossiemouth, and surrounded by hills, o'er-clad with waving pine, beech, oak, and elm trees. It is the general supposition that the town was originally a settlement of Helgy, a general of the army of Sigurd, the Norwegian Earl of Orkney, who, about the year 927, conquered Caithness, Sutherland, Ross, and Moray, and it is said from this person the name of Elgin is derived; and as the word Helgyn is still used in the inscription upon the seal of the town, it is probable that this etymology is correct. So early as the reign of William the Lion a castle was built here, the ruins of which are still visible on an eminence, called 'Lady-hill,' on the north-west side of the town. In 1224 Andrew, bishop of Moray, translated the bishopric from Spynie to the church of the Holy Trinity, near Elgin, but the cathedral was burnt down by Alexander Stewart, Lord of Badenoch (commonly called the Red Wolf of Badenoch,) son of Robert II, in 1390, who was forced from his fastnesses in Lockerbie, to do penance for the deed. About the year 1414 it was rebuilt in a most magnificent manner. From what still remains, it appears to have been a large and splendid edifice, in the Gothic style of architecture, 264 feet in length, and 35 in breadth. The chapter-house, which still remains pretty entire, and has of late been repaired, and covered with a roof of lead, by the Exchequer, is a most beautiful specimen of tasteful architecture; and the whole, when perfect, is supposed to have been one of the most magnificent religious structures in Europe. The ruins, which mischievous hands are forbidden further to violate, form a most conspicuous object on the approach to Elgin from the east; whilst, as a beautiful contrast, immediately opposite, towards the south, stands Anderson's Institution, for the support of old age and the education of youth, a splendid modern structure, erected a few years since by the munificent bequest of General Alexander Anderson, H.E.I.C.S. a native of the place, and of very poor parentage. The funds for the support of this institution are between £70,000, and £80,000. The structure is in the Grecian style, and occupies about an acre of ground: it is surmounted by a handsome dome, and on the pediment in front, which is supported by four massive stone pillars, is placed a statue of the benefactor, represented in the attitude of delivering a bible to a youthful figure, whilst, with his right hand, he is supporting the figure of an aged man: the building cost about £8,000. The apartments for the aged are in the west wing; those for the scholars of the institution, of whom there are about forty, who are orphans, and are wholly supported and educated in the establishment, are in the east wing. At the back, or south wing, is the Free School, where the children receive a free education, but are supported at home: the number of these averages from two hundred to two hundred and thirty. The western extremity of the town is embellished by Gray's Hospital, a noble and modern structure. Dr. Alexander Gray, of India, a native of Elgin, by will bequeathed £30,000, for the purpose of erecting and endowing an hospital for the sick poor of this town and county. This building is delightfully situate upon an eminence, and has a fine portico, supported by stately pillars, and surmounted by an elegant dome: the whole is very spacious, and built of fine stone, according to a design furnished by Mr. Gillespie, of Edinburgh.

The principal street is about a mile in length, widening in the centre, where stand the church and town-house; the latter a very antiquated building, but the church is a beautiful Grecian structure, after a plan by Archibald Simpson, Esq., and is calculated to hold about 2,000 persons. The western pediment is supported by six massive fluted columns; and at the east end stands a lofty tower, which is surmounted by a figure of Demosthenes' lantern, supported by eight columns: the building cost about £8,000. A new street, within these few years, has been opened to the north, commencing about the middle of the town: in this street are many fine buildings, particularly the Trinity Lodge Rooms, a handsome edifice erected in 1821, after a design by Mr. Burns, of Edinburgh, and at a cost of £3,000. This street is tastefully terminated by the Trinity or Scottish episcopal chapel, a neat Gothic edifice, erected in 1825. During the last ten years Elgin has very considerably increased in extent, and many of the old buildings, which obtruded themselves upon the front of High-street, have been pulled down, and new structures raised in their places. In this street are the two principal inns, the 'Gordon Arms' and the 'Star,' two excellent commercial establishments as well as posting houses. In the same thoroughfare are two banking houses, one a branch of the 'British Linen Company,' and the other of the 'Banking Company of Aberdeen.' The trade of this burgh cannot be considered extensive, being situate in an agricultural district, and principally depending thereon: there is, however, a woollen manufactory, which employs a good many hands; and a considerable correspondence is carried on with the south, by means of the steam boats which now ply regularly to the adjoining ports. Of the other branches, distilling is one in which several persons are engaged; and there is a trade in corn and leather of some consequence, and a tannery; whilst, in the neighbourhood, are extensive lime works and a millstone quarry.

Alexander II, in 1224, granted to the burgesses of Elgin a guild of merchants, which still continues, though the funds of the corporation were, for a considerable period, merged in the common good; connected with the guildry there is a flourishing charity fund, from which decayed members and their families derive handsome pensions. There are six incorporated trades—namely, the Hammermen, Glovers, Tailors, Shoemakers, Weavers, and Wrights. The municipal government is vested in a provost, four bailies, and twelve councillors. The burgh joins with Banff, Cullen, Inverury, Kintore, and Peterhead, in returning one member to parliament.

There are several mineral springs in the vicinity of Elgin, and from the healing virtues of their waters, with the salubrity of the climate, many are supposed to have derived considerable benefit. There are weekly markets on Tuesday and Friday; and fairs on the third Fridays in the months of February, March, and April; the second Friday of May, the first Tuesday of June, the third Tuesdays of July, August, September, and October, and the third Wednesday of December. The feeing markets are held on the Friday before the 26th of May and the Friday before the 22d of November. All old style, except the December fair.

LOSSIEMOUTH is a small village, in the parish of Drains, five miles from Elgin, situate on the banks of the Lossie, at its influx with the Moray Firth, from which locality its name is derived. It is the sea-port of Elgin, and is fast advancing into importance. A new harbour is forming, which, when completed, will render it a safe and commodious haven for shipping. It is estimated that the cost of this erection will amount to £20,000.

BURGHHEAD is a small fishing village in the parish of Duffus, 9 miles w. of Elgin, and about the same distance from Forres. It possesses a fine pier and a safe and commodious harbour, well protected from the north and east winds; at high water steam vessels may enter with perfect safety; at neap tides it has eleven to twelve feet of water, and at spring tides fourteen to fifteen feet. This was anciently a Roman as well as a Danish station: the remains of a fort of the latter nation are still visible; also a well, dug out of the solid rock, which is known by the name of the Roman well. The occupation of the inhabitants is fishing for salmon, herring, and cod. Several schooners and sloops belong to this place, and steamers land goods here for Elgin, Forres, &c. The population is estimated at about 800.

FOCHABERS, AND GARMOUTH.

FOCHABERS is a small town in the parish of Bellie, 52 miles E. by N. of Inverness, 12 s. w. of Cullen, 9 E. of Elgin, and 8 N. N. W. of Keith; situate on the great north road from Edinburgh to Inverness, and occupying a rural site in a deep valley, through which the Spey runs at a little distance to the west of the town. The houses are neatly built, and the streets diverge from a square, in the centre of which stands the parish church, and near to it an episcopalian chapel; the latter was opened for the first time on the 30th of June, 1834, the birth-day of the Dutchess of Gordon, at whose sole expense the building was erected.
There is also a large chapel for Roman catholics. An elegant stone bridge, which crossed the Spey near the town, was partly swept away by the great floods which occurred in the summer of 1829; it has subsequently been re-built.

This is not an important town as respects trade; its throughfare situation contributes somewhat to its prosperity, which is likewise assisted by the genteel neighbourhood by which it is surrounded. There are several houses for the accommodation of travellers;
of these the principal is the hotel in the High-street, which is also a posting-house. Fochabers is a burgh of barony, and is governed by a baron baillie, appointed by the Duke of Richmond, whose seat (Gordon Castle) graces the vicinity of the town, and is the great object of attraction to, and admiration of, strangers. It is allowed to be one of the most magnificent structures, and, perhaps, the finest house north of the Firth of Forth. The edifice was originally a gloomy tower in the centre of a morass, called the Bog of Gight, and accessible only by a narrow causeway and a drawbridge. It is now a vast quadrangular structure, the front stretching to the length of 568 feet, surrounded by a beautiful park and equally beautiful country. It is approached by a gateway, situate at the west-end of the village. The body of the edifice rises to the height of four lofty stories, and on each end there is a pavilion of two stories, connected each by a gallery of two lower stories. The ancient tower, which rises to the height of 90 feet, overlooks the whole structure, and commands a view of the entire plain, with all its waving woods and the windings of the river Spey. The busts and pictures which grace the interior of this noble residence, are most valuable, comprising many rare and original gems of art.

The parish of BELLIE, of which Fochabers is the kirk town, is partly in this county and partly in Banff-shire; it is six miles in length by four in breadth, bounded by the sea on the north, and, on the southeast, by Rathven and Boharm. The county of Moray comes here east of the Spey to a small extent, and on this piece of ground, which is in the parish of Bellie, stands the town of Fochabers. When William, Duke of Cumberland, was on his march to fight Prince Charles at Culloden, he slept a night in the manse of Bellie. Fairs are held at Fochabers on the third Wednesday of January, the 4th Wednesdays in the months of March, May, October, and December, and the second Wednesday in August (all new style.)

GARMOUTH is a modern thriving village in the parish of Speymouth, between four and five miles N. W. of
bank. Its principal trade is in the exporting of timber, which is floated down the Spey, and of salmon, of which considerable quantities are caught, and sent principally to the London market. Its imports are lime and coal. The port has a good harbour, formed by the mouth of the Spey; and here a number of vessels have been built entirely of native wood. A fair is held on the 30th of June, for cattle.

FORRES, FINDHORN, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

FORRES is a royal burgh, the capital of the parish of its name, and the seat of a presbytery; 201 miles N. by W. of Edinburgh by way of Aberdeen, and 165 by way of Brechin and Huntly; 75 N. W. of Aberdeen, 27 N. E. of Inverness, 21 W. of Fochabers, 20 E. of Fort George, 12 W. by S. of Elgin, and 11 E. of Nairn. It is a neatly-built clean town, and stands on rising ground, at the distance of about five miles from the bay of Findhorn, which is its sea-port. Forres is noted for one of the most remarkable stone obelisks, of ancient date, in Britain; this interesting object stands at the east end of the town, and is supposed to commemorate a pacification concluded here between Malcolm I. and Sweno, a Danish invader, about the beginning of the eleventh century: it is an enormous slab of grey stone, upwards of twenty feet in height, supported by a socket which conceals at least three feet more, and it is believed to reach fourteen feet into the ground; the shape resembles that of a very long wedge, or, as some fancifully describe it, a Highland broad-sword; the figures upon the obelisk, which are presumed to represent a battle and subsequent treaty, are wonderfully distinct, considering that they must have withstood the blunt of wind and weather during the last eight centuries. At the western extremity of the town is an eminence, on which once stood a castle, wherein Duffus, one of the early kings of Scotland, was perfidiously killed by Donwald, governor of the fortress; which circumstance, it is said, Shakspeare has made use of in his dramatic version of the murder of King Duncan by Macbeth; and it was on a waste in the neighbourhood that that hero, along with Banquo (according to the old historians), met 'the weird sisters,' who gave him so many fatal promises: the exact spot on which that event is asserted, by the country-people, to have taken place is marked by a small clump of trees, about two hundred yards north from the post-road between Forres and Nairn, near a toll-bar five miles from the former of these places, and nearly on the confines of the two counties of Moray and Nairn; the extensive heath still surrounding this place is visibly worthy of the epithet 'blasted,' being one of the most desolate tracts of waste land anywhere to be seen. Upon an eminence to the south-east of the town stands a tower, erected by the inhabitants, in general, of Forres in honour of the naval hero, Lord Nelson: from its elevated situation, and being surrounded by a fine level country, known as 'the plain of Forres,' a very fine view may be here obtained, and the object is conspicuous at a considerable distance. The trade of this town is not of an extensive nature: among the principal branches are two distilleries, a brewery doing a good business, a capital hotel in the High-street, and two branch establishments—one of the 'National Bank of Scotland,' the other of the 'British Linen Company.' A newspaper is published here on the first Wednesday of each month; there are two masonic lodges, various friendly societies, and the meetings of the Trafalgar club are held here annually. As a royal burgh Forres is governed by a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and twelve councillors. A justice of peace court sits on the first Monday of every month for the recovery of debts under £5. Nearly in the middle of the main street, which extends about half a mile from east to west, is the town-house and gaol: if not an ornamental structure, it is a convenient one. The burgh joins with Nairn, Fortrose, and Inverness, in returning a member to parliament.

The places of worship are the established church, a chapel for seceders, and another for independents. During the year 1824 a fine stone building was erected, called Anderson's institution, for educating the children of Forres, Rafford, and Kinloss; funds were left for this purpose by Jonathan Anderson, Esq. late of Glasgow, and a native of Kinloss. In this academy all the useful languages are taught, together with mathematics, drawing, geography, arithmetic, writing, and book-keeping; under this institution is also admitted a free class. Weekly markets are held on Tuesday and Friday: the fairs, on the first Wednesdays in January and July; the third Wednesdays in February, April, May, and November; and the fourth Wednesdays in August and September. Feeing markets for servants are held on the Saturday before the 26th May (called Whitsunday market); and the Saturday before the 22d November (called Martinmas market), all new style.

FINDHORN is a small village and sea-port in the parish of Kinloss, five miles north of Forres, of which it may be considered the port. It lies at the point of land which is rendered peninsular by the bay of Brough Head on the east, and the harbour of Findhorn on the west; the latter is convenient, and possesses a share of coasting trade in the exportation of salmon, corn, bark, and wood: the latter article is principally shipped to Newcastle and Sunderland, where it is used for props in the coal-pits. The imports here consist of coal, lime, and different kinds of goods.

FIFESHIRE

IS an extensive, populous, and important county, on the eastern side of Scotland; it is a peninsula, having the Frith of Forth on the south, the German Ocean on the east, and the Tay on the north, which river separates it from Forfarshire and Perthshire; on the west it is bounded by the latter county and Kinross, with a small part of Clackmannan. The breadth, from its eastern apex to its western point, where it intersects Kinross and Perth, is about thirty-five miles; towards the south, however (from Kinghorn to the verge of Kinross-shire), it is not more than ten miles across: the extreme length, from north-east to south-west, in a curved line, is full forty miles. The regularity of its figure is much interrupted by the intrusion of Kinross-shire, which creates a considerable indentation, not far from its centre, on the west. Its superficies comprise 467 square miles, or 298,880 English acres; of cultivated land there are about 210,000 acres, and of uncultivated about 90,000; the lakes cover about three square miles. At an early period the district of Fife included Kinross-shire, Clackmannanshire, and part of the counties of Perth and Stirling; it was then designated Ross, a term signifying a peninsula, and seems to have then been under one general jurisdiction. This large territory has long since been dismembered—Clackmannan was first taken from it, and next Kinross was erected into a distinct shire. The origin of the name 'Fife' has much puzzled etymologists, nor has a satisfactory conclusion ever been arrived at upon this subject. The monkish chroniclers assume its derivation from one Fifus Duffus, a hero of whom nothing more appears to be known than that he was a chieftain who performed some great exploits, and did the county essential service in war. The ancient history of Fife is enveloped in nearly similar obscurity: its original possessors were the Celts, and their invaders the Romans; and, towards the close of the ninth century, the King of the Scots obtained paramount sway over the district. Between this period and the eleventh century, the country was in a great measure either the property or under the jurisdiction of a potent succession of 'thanes,' of the title of Macduff: one of these, Duncan Macduff, was created Earl of Fife by Malcolm III, about 1057; and from this time, till the family honours were merged by the marriage of female heirs or extinction in other families, and finally lost by forfeiture in 1424, the Earls of Fife were amongst the most influential of the Scottish peerage. After the lapse of more than three centuries, the ancient title of Earl of Fife was revived as an Irish peerage, in 1759, in the person of William Duff, Lord Braco of Kilbride, who, according to his genealogists, derived his descent from the original earls. The lineal descendant of this person now inherits the title and privileges—the estates of the family being situated principally in Aberdeenshire and Banffshire.

SOIL, PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, &c.—The peninsula of Fife was originally almost an entire forest, full of swamps; and while in this condition was the haunt of wild beasts, especially swine of a monstrous size. It is understood that such animals were not extirpated in the reign of James V, who, like his forefathers, often made Fife the scene of his hunting expeditions. In this county are found four kinds of soils, differing considerably in quality, and generally occupying distinct tracts of country. Along the braes facing the Frith of Forth, the composition of the land is for the most part excellent—being deep rich loam, good clay, and gravel mixed with loamy earth, based chiefly on whin-rock; north from the waving line which bounds this territory to the base of the hills on the south side of the vale of Fife, and from St. Andrew's on the east to the western parts of the county, the soil is in general vastly inferior—a great proportion being cold, poor, and very wet clay; the tract of the 'Howe of Fife' consists of loam, partly deep and moist, and partly light and dry, with also a considerable proportion of moor and moss; in the hilly district, from the vale to the river Tay, the land is almost uniformly of the best description, having much rich loam, clay and gravel. Consequent upon the progressive operation of habitual and experimental cultivation, these primitive properties of the soil have been modified, improved or ameliorated, according to the system or means and perseverance of the agriculturist. The peninsula of Fife exhibits in its surface a series of vales, stretching from west to east parallel with the sea on each side, and of greater or less dimensions: these vales, which, from the undulating character of the country, are in some places not so distinct as in others, are the basins of different small streams, which merge either in the Frith of Forth or St. Andrew's bay. The shire is fortunate in possessing inexhaustible mines of coal, with whinstone, sandstone, limestone, and some ironstone. Coal and lime are wrought only in the southern division of the county, between the two extremities, and some miles inland; within this district there are as extensive lime and coal works as can be seen in Scotland. The sandstone found in this part is of the very best quality; from its beauty it is exported to Edinburgh, where some of the finest edifices have been built with it. Marl is abundant in some places—so likewise is fine clay, for the composition of bricks, tiles, and pottery. From the possession of the above fossils, and the exuberant produce of corn and cattle, it is a common saying among the people of Fife, that their county could support itself better, without the aid of imported articles, than any other district in Scotland. Besides supplying home consumption, it enjoys a very large export trade in corn, potatoes, pigs, black cattle, lime, coal, and sandstone—not to mention that of its manufactured goods. Lead has been discovered in the western Lomond, and mines of this ore have been profitably worked in the parish of Kemback: pebbles, much admired for the high polish of which they are susceptible, have been found in different places; with agates and rubies of fine water. The staple MANUFACTURE of Fife is linen goods, in the weaving of which whole towns, villages and hamlets are busily employed without intermission: fine diapers and sbirtings, and the most elegant table-linen, are produced from the looms of this county; of this trade Dunfermline is the principal seat; while the yarns, composed of foreign flax, are mostly spun and bleached on the Leven and in the adjacent places. Blankets and plaidings are also manufactured in the shire, but not to an important extent. The CLIMATE of this peninsula is, perhaps, as genial and salubrious as that of other districts more to the south: the fogs, which formerly were continually exhaling from the lochs and marshes, to the injury of the crops and the health of the inhabitants, who were then afflicted with agues and other concomitant diseases, have long since been effectually dissipated by the drainage of the damp lands and the general spread of healthful cultivation. Exclusive of the Forth and the Tay, the county is watered by several streams—none of which, however, are entitled to the denomination of rivers, except the Eden and the Leven, both of which abound with excellent salmon. Altogether, Fife is a most important district: its agricultural prosperity and capabilities—its manufactures—its fisheries, and its mineral treasures—its burghs, sea-ports, and fine harbours—and its domestic and foreign commerce—form a combination of advantages that must distinguish this shire as one of the most favoured, probably, in all North Britain.

This county forms a sheriffdom, under one sheriff depute; but, being divided into an eastern and a western district, each is placed under the jurisdiction of a sheriff substitute: in these two districts are comprehended the four subdivisions of St. Andrews, Cupar, Dunfermline, and Kirkcaldy. It has politically and ecclesiastically attached to it the islands of Inchcolm, Inchkeith, and May, in the Frith of Forth. Fife comprises sixty parishes, and two parts of parishes—having thirteen Royal Burghs with parliamentary representation: these, conjointly with Culross, in Perthshire—Queen's-ferry, in Linlithgowshire—and Stirling, in Stirlingshire—return three members; and the county sends another to the senate. The eminences of greatest altitude in Fife-shire are, Kelly-Law, 800 feet; Largo-Law, 1,020; East Lomond Hill, 1,260; and West Lomond Hill, 1,280, above the level of the sea.

ABERDOUR

Is a village and sea-port, 10 miles n. w. of Edinburgh (across the Frith of Forth), 8 from Kirkcaldy, 6 from Kinghorn, and 3 from Burntisland; situate a few hundred yards from the coast of the Frith of Forth. It is a place of considerable antiquity, and belonged, in the twelfth century, to the family of the Euponts, from which it passed to the Mortimers by marriage, and afterwards to the Douglasses, one of whom, in 1457, was created Lord Aberdour and Earl of Morton, whose castle, which stood close to the village, was burnt down by accident upwards of a century ago. Aberdour has a good harbour, and it is the shipping port for Donibristle colliery; it is also a place of summer resort of the citizens of Edinburgh and their families, there being good bathing ground here, and the exposure being sunny and warm. The chief cause, however, of its popularity as a bathing-place is the ready access which is obtained by steam vessels, and other means of conveyance from the opposite shore. This district formerly belonged to the monastery of Inchcolm; the small island of Inchcolm now belongs to the parish of Aberdour; the form of the latter is nearly square, measuring about three miles and a half each way; it lies along the north bank of the Forth, and is divided into two districts by a small ridge of hills, which run from east to west.

ANSTRUTHER (EAST AND WEST), AND KILRENNY.

ANSTRUTHER EASTER, a royal burgh, in the county of Fife, is 25 miles E. of Kinghorn, and about 10 s. of St. Andrew's. It has an excellent harbour, which is the chief asylum for vessels overtaken by storms in the Firth of Forth. It was a place of great importance before the union with England, carrying on an extensive trade with Holland and France; and, from its contiguity to Cellardykes, it is still one of the first fishing stations in Scotland. The trade is principally of a domestic nature; baking, brewing, tanning, and fish-curing, are the most prominent branches; but there is likewise a considerable portion of business done in the export of grain, potatoes, &c.: a number of coasters, and several square-rigged vessels, belong to this sea-port; two sailing-packets ply weekly between it and Leith, conveying from hence grain, fish, &c., and returning with merchants' goods; and the Aberdeen and Dundee steam-vessels also take in passengers here, on their way to and from Edinburgh. It is the station of a custom-house, whose district extends from Edesmouth to Largo bay. The town is governed by three bailies, a treasurer, and 15 councillors, elected under the Scotch borough reform act: the annual revenue of the corporation does not exceed £100. This burgh is united with St. Andrew's, Cupar, Crail, Kilrenny, Anstruther Wester, and Pittweem, in returning one member to parliament; the constituency of this burgh is 52, and that of the district 694. A branch of the 'National Bank of Scotland' has been lately established here, and is said to be beneficial and prosperous; there are two excellent inns, the 'Commercial,' and the 'New Inn.' In no town of its size in Scotland, perhaps, is there a greater number of good shops, or a superior display of drapery, grocery, and hardware goods; there is a good butchers' market; plentiful and cheap supplies of fish of all kinds, milk, butter and eggs; and a weekly corn market, recently commenced, and held on Saturday, promises to be continued with advantage. The manse of Anstruther Easter, an old-fashioned building, was erected and occupied by Andrew Melville, the 'father of presbytery,' who was superintendent or bishop of the district; it is likewise worthy of note, that Dr. Chalmers, the celebrated orator and divine, and 'the poet of mirth,' Professor Tennant, author of 'Anster Fair,' were natives of this town.

ANSTRUTHER WESTER, which adjoins Anstruther Easter, is also a royal burgh; it holds its charter of incorporation from James VI, in 1587; a handsome bridge connects the two burghs. The inhabitants are principally employed in agricultural pursuits, and there is a pretty extensive cart and plough manufactory carried on. Great improvements have been effected in this town within the last twelve years: among these must be noticed the widening of the main street from thirteen to thirty feet, its M'Adamization, and the formation of a neat footway or pavement, at an expense of £450, contributed equally by the burgh and county; the place is now amply supplied with water, the streets well lighted, common sewers and other conveniences constructed, whereby the public thoroughfares and lanes are kept in a clean and orderly state; a new manse and offices for the clergyman, and a handsome school and dwelling-house for the schoolmaster, have also been erected. The magistrates and minister have the patronage of a burser to the united college of St. Andrew's. This burgh is exempt from the operation of the Scotch burgh reform act, and its municipal authorities are appointed under the old system. Fairs are held on the first Tuesday after the 11th of April, the 5th of July, and the 12th of November.

KILRENNY, a royal burgh, is one mile from Anstruther and three from Crail; the parish, which bears the same name, approaches a circular form, having a diameter of about two miles. The coast here is one continued range of rocks, with two small creeks, which form the harbour of Kilrenny and the port of Cellardykes, or Nether Kilrenny; the harbour of the latter is capable of much improvement, and a hope is entertained of its future prosperity. This burgh, in conjunction with the Anstruthers and other places before named, returns a member to the legislature.

AUCHTERDERRAN, KINGLASSIE AND LOCHGELLIE.

AUCHTERDERRAN parish is four miles long and three broad. The soil is moist and not very fertile, and only about a third is under tillage; the rest under pasture. The inhabitants, who assiduously apply themselves to agriculture, have much improved the condition and appearance of the district. A considerable bed of coal traverses this parish.—LOCHGELLIE, which is the principal village in the parish, is 8 miles n. w. of Kirkcaldy, and 6 E. of Dunfermline.

The parish of KINGLASSIE extends four miles in length, by two in breadth at its narrowest part and four at its broadest. It is watered by the Lochty and the Ore, tributary streams of the Leven. On the first of these stands the irregular village of Kinglassie, which is 2 miles from Leslie, 3 N. E. of Lochgellie, and 7 N. of Kinghorn. There are quarries of freestone, and the coal obtained in this parish is considered the best in the county. The inhabitants of the village are principally supported by weaving. Two annual fairs are entitled to be holden.

AUCHTERMUCHTY AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

AUCHTERMUCHTY, signifying in Gaelic the Cottage of the King, is a royal burgh in the parish of its name, 22 miles from Dundee, 19 from St. Andrew's, 14 from Perth, and 5 from Newburgh, situate on the road from Kinross to Cupar Fife, ten miles from the former and nine from the latter town. It was constituted a royal burgh by James IV, which charter was confirmed by James VI, and it still enjoys all the privileges arising therefrom, except that of electing a representative in parliament. It is governed by three bailies, fourteen councillors, a treasurer, and town clerk. A justice of peace court is held on the first Monday in every month. The town house, though not an old building, is in a very decayed state; the bell in it is said to be the best in the kingdom. A considerable trade is carried on here in manufacturing linen and cotton, by some establishments from Glasgow, and this forms the principal business of the place. A stream of water, called Loverspool, runs through the town, dividing it into two nearly equal parts; on its banks are two corn mills; they are the property of the town, and the inhabitants are compelled to bring their corn here to be ground: there is also a flax spinning mill, with a sawing mill. A branch of the Glasgow Union Bank is settled here; and a savings' bank was established, some years ago, with success.

Besides a number of benefit societies, there are three masons' lodges, called St. Ogr, King Robert de Bruce and a Royal Arch. Auchtermuchty is irregularly built—many of the houses are thatched and low, but the greater proportion are of a superior appearance. There is a good substantial mansion house in the town, which was once the residence of the Thane of Fife. John Bruce, Esq., of Grange and Falkland, is patron of the parish, and has of late years become a large proprietor in it. There is a castle on one of his estates, which was built by the unfortunate Mary, Queen of Scotland.

The established church is an old respectable edifice, with a spire, standing environed by the town. The other places of worship are a united secession church and a relief church. There are four annual fairs, viz. 5th April, 13th of July, 21st of August, and the first Tuesday in November; the fair in July is one of the largest in the county.

POST OFFICE, Mrs. James Laing, Post Mistress.—Letters from EDINBURGH and the North arrive every morning at eight, and are despatched every evening at five.

BURNTISLAND

IS a royal burgh, sea-port, and post town in the parish of its name, 8½ miles from Dysart, 6 from Kirkcaldy, and 3 from Fife; situate on the shore of the Frith of Forth, well sheltered by hills, which rise towards the north in amphitheatrical form. The harbour is reckoned the best on the frith, being both capacious and of a considerable depth of water; it has also an excellent dry dock; and a light-house stands on the right hand on entering the haven. The town, formerly called Wester Kinghorn, consists of one long main street, with smaller diverging thoroughfares. Herring curing and cooperage are the chief branches of trade; and there is a distillery. This place was constituted a royal burgh by James VI, and its magistracy consists of a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and twenty-one councillors: it has seven incorporated trades, and, in connection with Dysart, Kirkcaldy, and Kinghorn, returns a member to parliament.

The places of worship are the parish church, and one of the united secession: the former is a commodious modern edifice, overlooking the sea. A considerable number of respectable mansions are erected in the town and its vicinity; and a neat row of cottages, within an enclosure, has been built on the Knolls which lie between the Links and the sea: it is called Lamerlaws, a name importing hills on the sea. From this harbour there is a regular steam-boat conveyance to Leith and Newhaven.

CERES AND KEMBACK.

CERES (or Cyrus) is a village in the parish of its name, nearly three miles south-east of Cupar Fife, situate on the rise of a hill. Flax spinning and the weaving of linen goods prevail in the village. The parish is eight miles long and from one to four in breadth; the surface is hilly, but in general is subjected to agriculture. On the north it is bounded by Cupar parish, from which it is divided by the river Eden; on the east is Cameron, on the south Largo, and on the west Colts. The old house of Scotstarvet, once the family residence of the Scotts, one of whom wrote a remarkable little work entitled—"The Staggering State of Scots Statesmen," is within the parish, and occupies a conspicuous situation on the top of the high grounds, which bound the house of Fife on the east. The house contains a museum of antiquities and curiosities. The parish church, which stands in an elevated situation, has a castellated square tower, which is seen at a considerable distance. Fairs are held on the 24th June, the first Friday after the 12th August, and the 20th October.

The parish of KEMBACK is nearly of triangular figure, with its broadest side to the Eden, and measures about three and a half miles in breadth and length. It is one of the richest and most beautiful districts in the country; out of 1850 acres more than 1500 are fine arable land, and there are many fine plantations in different parts of the parish. Besides the Eden it is watered by the Ceres stream. The church stands about a mile and a half from Ceres village and three from Cupar.

CRAIL AND KING'S-BARNES.

CRAIL is a royal burgh and sea-port in the parish of its name, 29 miles E. of Kinghorn, 10 s. E. of St. Andrew's, and 3 from Kilrenny. It was anciently called Caryle or Cairraile, and is mentioned by old historians as a town of considerable note, so early as the middle of the ninth century; its importance in later days has, however, greatly declined, and notwithstanding it possesses great capabilities as a port, it enjoys but very little trade; this, in some measure, may be ascribed to the inconvenience of its harbour, for it is eligibly situated, and has the advantage of having abundance of coal in the immediate neighbourhood; and its white fishing is generally successful. The town consists of two streets, and two or three lanes; of the former one is broad and spacious, containing some good houses, several of which are of that massive and antique description which indicate past splendour. Crail was erected into a royal burgh by Robert Bruce, and it is governed by three bailies, a treasurer, and fifteen councillors. It has seven incorporated trades, and in conjunction with St. Andrew's, Cupar Fife, the Anstruthers, Kilrenny and Pittenweem, returns one member to Parliament. The church, which was erected in 1517, is in good preservation. The celebrated James Sharp, archbishop of St. Andrew's, was once minister of this church, and his hand-writing is still to be seen in the session records. A little to the east of the harbour are the fragments of a castle or palace, once the residence of David I, the remains of which consist chiefly of a wall, now partially enclosing a garden.

The parish of KING'S-BARNES, lies in the eastern part of the county, with its eastern side to the German ocean—originally it formed part of Crail, but was separated from that parish in 1631. The village lies a mile to the south, on the public road round the coast, 6½ miles south-east of St. Andrew's, and 3¼ north of Crail. It is a thriving little place, and carries on a considerable manufacture of shirtings and other linens for the Dundee market. The largest and best flag-stones in the country are obtained near the village, and marble of a fine quality is met with occasionally. It is entitled to hold two annual fairs. Pitmilny, a very ancient seat, is in the northern part of the parish.

CUPAR FIFE AND DAIRSIE.

CUPAR (popularly designated CUPAR FIFE, to distinguish it from Cupar-Angus, on the borders of Perthshire,) is a royal burgh, the capital of the parish of Cupar and of the county of Fife; 30 miles N. of Edinburgh, 22 N.E. of Kinghorn, 13 s. of Dundee, 10 W. of St. Andrew's, and the like distance N.E. of Falkland; pleasantly situate on the left bank of the Eden. It is a place of considerable antiquity, but in the present day its aspect is that of a modern thriving town: there are few or no ancient remains to be discerned in or about Cupar; of its castle, so frequently alluded to in Scottish history, not a vestige is now visible; the Castle-hill, where that fortress once stood (in which the plays of Sir David Lindsay, and the 'Satire of the Three Estates,' were acted in 1555), has been for some time occupied with schools and a theatre; and the spot which once resounded with the clangour of arms is now devoted to learning, education, and instructive amusement. The principal streets of the town are the Crossgate, the Milgate, the Bonnygate, and St. Catherine-street, which last is built on the plan of the houses in the New Town of Edinburgh, particularly those on the north side of that portion of the capital: in this street are the county buildings, the principal hotel, coffee and news rooms, and library. Opposite the county buildings is an elegant episcopal chapel, in the Grecian style; its site is nearly that of a convent of Dominican or Black Friars (in old records described as being situate to the east of the town), the steeple of which was in part erected by the prior of St. Andrew's in 1415, and finished by the Rev. Wm. Scott, who was for many years minister of Cupar, and who died in 1642; the modern edifice is a great ornament to the town. The streets and most conspicuous shops are lighted with gas, supplied by a company established in 1830. On the south side of the river is the prison, said to resemble the gaol of Glasgow. The principal trade of Cupar arises from the linen manufacture; but there are also other prosperous branches, as those of brewing, tanning, coach-making, &c., and of all the various necessary and domestic avocations a due proportion. There are no fewer than eleven insurance agencies, and two branch banks, viz. one of the 'British Linen Company,' the other of the 'Commercial Bank of Scotland.' As Cupar lies on the main road through Fife from the county of Edinburgh to that of Forfar, and is a distinguished stage, it enjoys all the advantages, and partakes of the bustle, attendant upon the continued passing and re-passing of coaches.

As a royal burgh, Cupar is governed by a provost, three bailies, and a dean of guild, with a treasurer and twenty-one councillors: in conjunction with St. Andrew's, the Anstruthers, Craik, Kilronny, and Pittenweem, the burgh elects a member of parliament. Being the county town and head burgh of the shire, the public business relating to both is transacted at Cupar; and here, consequently, reside a considerable number of practitioners before the courts of the shire. Quarter sessions are held on the first Tuesdays in the months of March, May and August, and the last Tuesday of October; a sheriff court is held on the Tuesday during session, and the following Thursday; a small debt court, likewise, at the period of session, and on the first Tuesday of every month during vacation; and a commissary court sits on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

The places of worship are the parish church, a chapel in connexion therewith, and others for the relief, united secession, original burgher, baptist, and episcopalian congregations. The schools of Cupar are of the best class, and are supplied with able teachers in all the useful branches of education; and a public library, well stocked with books in the various branches of literature and science, testifies at once the sound judgment and polished taste of the inhabitants. The late Mr. Robert Tullis printed many excellent editions of the classics, under the revision of the late Dr. John Hunter, of St. Andrew's, which, for their beautiful and accurate typography, were highly esteemed. The press of Cupar now issues two weekly journals—the 'Fife Herald,' and the 'Fife-shire Journal'—both published on Thursday. The town has several useful institutions, chiefly for the encouragement of agricultural and horticultural improvements. In the neighbourhood, to the west, there is a race-course of the first order, on which, under the patronage of the noblemen and gentlemen of the Fife Hunt, horse-races annually take place. The market, which is a good one for corn, is held every Thursday; and the fairs occur on the first Thursdays in the months of January, May, June, August, October and December, the second Thursdays in the months of March, April and November, and the third Thursday of February.

DAIRSIE is a small neat village, in the parish of its name; situate on the main road from Cupar to Dundee, three miles from the former and eight from the latter town. The river Eden, which intersects the parish, is crossed by a good bridge of three arches, the erection of Archbishop Spotteswood, who was the proprietor of the valuable Dairsie estate. The church, which is in the Saxon style of architecture, and surmounted by a neat spire, bears striking features of great antiquity. Dairsie castle, now a ruin, is noted as having been the residence of Archbishop Sharp, as well as the place where a parliament was called upon to assemble. Chapel-well, in this parish, in high repute for the healing properties of its waters, is the site of a Roman catholic chapel, of which no remains are visible. This parish is nearly three miles in extent each way; with little exception, the whole is fine arable land, and freestone and whinstone abound beneath its surface.

IS a royal burgh and the seat of a presbytery—the capital of the parish of its name, the chief town in the western part of Fife, and the most important in the scale of manufactures in the county; it is 16 miles n. w. of Edinburgh, 47 n. e. of Glasgow, 31 s. s. w. of Cupar, and six from North Queen's-ferry; situate on rising ground, three miles north from the Frith of Forth, and three hundred feet above its level at Limekilns, the nearest part of the coast. Thus elevated, it commands a prospect remarkably various and beautiful, extending over fourteen different counties, and comprising a fine marine view on the east. At an early period Dunfermline became a royal residence; Malcolm Canmore usually resided at a tower, or castle, built on a peninsulated hill in a valley near the town; a palace was afterwards erected not far from the tower, in a most romantic situation—the south-west wall still remains a monument of the magnificence of the fabric of which it formed a part. The monastery, one of the most ancient in Scotland, was founded by Malcolm Canmore for monks of the Benedictine order, and was completed by his son, Alexander I: it continued to be governed by a prior till the reign of David I, who raised it to the dignity of an abbey, and, in 1124, translated thither thirteen monks from Canterbury. The abbey was richly endowed, and derived its revenues from very distant parts of the kingdom; it was an imposing and extensive building, but fell a sacrifice to the plundering army of Edward I, on his insidious intervention in the affairs of Scotland; about the commencement of the sixteenth century all that survived of this venerable pile was the church, with a few cells for the monks; these were demolished at the reformation, and even the ruins of the abbey are now inconsiderable. The parish church and steeple were large and ancient, being part of the abbey just mentioned, but the present edifice is nearly modern. Here the founder, his queen, and several of the Scottish monarchs, lie interred; and here were discovered, about twenty years since, the remains of that often celebrated hero, Robert Bruce.

The town consists of one principal street, stretching from east to west; with a number of smaller streets, crossing down-hill at right angles, or proceeding in a northerly direction. The houses along the leading thoroughfares are nearly all well built, and have somewhat of a metropolitan air: surveying the spires, and other eminent points in an external view of the place, it presents the contour of a venerable city; and its internal aspect indicates much comfort, if not elegance. Within the last five-and-thirty years its size has been greatly increased, not only by the extension of the cross streets, but by the addition of a large suburb to the west; and during the last seven years the improvements effected have been considerable. Perhaps the most prominent public building in the town is an edifice used as a hotel, and comprising apartments for the meetings of the guildy; it stands on the south side of the main street, and is constructed in the Grecian style, with a spire 132 feet in height rising over the front; this erection is called the 'Spire Hotel.' The burgh of Dunfermline, it appears, held of the monastery, which formerly possessed paramount jurisdiction and exclusive privileges here, for nearly two centuries; and became royal by a charter from James VI, dated 24th May, 1588: in this document the monarch ratifies sundry charters, donations and indentures, by John and Robert, abbots of Dunfermline, particularly one dated the 10th October, 1395, by which the abbot and convent renounce, in favour of the eldermen and community, the whole income of the burgh belonging to their revenue, with the small customs, profits of court, &c., 'reserving, however, the power of punishment, should any of the magistrates be guilty of injustice in the exercise of their office.' In 1724 the burgh was placed on the footing it still maintains as respects its government, which is vested in a provost, two bailies and a dean of guild, together with a treasurer, a chamberlain and a town-clerk. The council is composed of twenty-two members, twelve of whom are guild or merchant councillors, and ten from the trades, eight of these being deacons of the incorporated professions, which are Wrights, Smiths, Weavers, Tailors, Shoemakers, Bakers, Masons and Fleshers; the town council is annually elected throughout all its members. The burgh joins with Stirling, Inverkeithing, Culross and Queen's-ferry in sending a member to parliament. Dunfermline is constituted the seat of a sheriff substitute for the western district of Fife: he holds a weekly court on Fridays during the session, and a court twice in every month for deciding debts below £8, and other petty subjects of litigation; a justice of peace small debt court is held on the first Monday of every month.

The constantly increasing population and prosperity of Dunfermline may be almost entirely ascribed to its manufacture of, and traffic in, linen goods; these comprise shirtings, diapers for table-cloths, fine towelling, &c.: the manufacture and sale of commodities of this description took root in the town about the commencement of the last century, and a few years ago it was calculated that the value of the table-linen annually manufactured here exceeded £100,000; this article is woven of all dimensions, of the most elegant patterns, and to a greater extent than in any other town in Great Britain. There are many large establishments for the spinning of linen yarns. It is said that the chest of the incorporation of weavers contains two curious specimens of their art: a man's shirt wrought in the loom by a weaver of the name of Inglis, and a woman's shift by another named Moldrum, both of which are without seam, and effected without the assistance of a needle; the only part which Inglis could not execute was a button for the neck. Exclusive of the linen trade, there are other branches of magnitude and importance: the coal trade is very considerable; there are breweries, an iron and brass foundry, manufactories of tobacco, &c. A branch of the 'British Linen Company's' bank, one of the 'Bank of Scotland,' and another of the 'Commercial Bank of Scotland,' are established here; likewise a savings' bank, now in operation upwards of twenty years. There are three large inns, and many other houses for public accommodation of inferior note. The parish abounds with valuable mines and minerals; in many places there are rocks of white freestone, and whinstone for paving the streets is in sufficient supply; limestone has been wrought very extensively; ironstone, also, is a plentiful article throughout this locality, and is shipped off in large quantities annually to the great Carron iron works.

The parish church has been collegiate, and under the care of two ministers, since 1645; and there is a chapel of ease connected with it. The other places of worship, with their situations, and the respective officiating clergymen, will be found under a distinct head in a succeeding page. The secession church, which has now extended over a considerable part of Great Britain, became conspicuous here at an early period of its history—the Rev. Ralph Erskine, one of the parochial clergymen of Dunfermline, being one of the four ministers who first seceded from the establishment in 1773, and shortly after founded Queen Anne-street church here, which, it is believed, was the first or second in the secession denomination. The town and its neighbourhood, much to their credit, support upwards of a dozen friendly societies. There are two superior schools, the 'Dunfermline grammar school,' and the 'Dunfermline academy;' also Lancastrerian, infants' and sabbath schools, and several private academies; four public libraries; mechanics' and scientific institutions; bible, tract, missionary, and other religious societies; and various charitable associations. Markets are held on Tuesday and Friday, the former principally for corn; there are fairs on the third Wednesday in January, second Wednesday in March, fourth Wednesday in April, first Wednesday in July, second Tuesday in August, fourth Friday in September, the last Thursday in October, and the fourth Wednesday in November.

DYSART,

WITH THE PARISHES OF PATH-HEAD, ABBOT'S HALL, AUCHTERTOUL, KENNOWAY AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DYSART, a royal and parliamentary borough in the parish of its name, is one mile east of the populous town of Kirkgate, seated on a gentle declivity towards the Firth of Forth. It consists of three streets, with a sort of square in the centre, where stands the town-house—a building at one period of much greater importance to the commercial uses of the town than it is in the present day. So early as 1546, Dysart is mentioned as one of the principal trading towns on the coast of Fife, and was much noted for the manufacture and export of salt: the alteration in commerce consequent on the union of 1707 destroyed the ancient legitimate trade, which was succeeded by smuggling; and this contraband traffic, in its turn, has been happily annihilated. The little trade it now enjoys is respectable and stable, and consists in the weaving of ticks, checks, and similar fabrics, which employs a good number of the inhabitants: in the vicinity there are mines, also, of coal, and quarries of ironstone; the former were wrought here upwards of three centuries ago, for at that period it is recorded that a pit had caught fire. The harbour is good; the central street contains many substantial houses, but of very antique appearance. Dysart was created a royal burgh in the beginning of the sixteenth century, but the original charter is lost: it is governed by two bailies, a treasurer, and twenty-two councillors; and joins with Kirkgate, Kinghorn, and Burntland, in returning a member to parliament. There is a news-room and a mechanics' institute; the former was called into existence by the patronage of Lord Loughborough, the son of the Earl of Rosslyn, who has a seat in the neighbourhood. The most remarkable object of antiquity near the town is the castle of Ravensraig, standing on a rock projecting into the sea; it was inhabited in Oliver Cromwell's time, and was assailed by a party of his troops: it has for many years been deserted, and time has reduced it to a ruinous state. Dysart gives the title of earl to a branch of the Murrays of Tullibardine. Besides Dysart, the parish contains the villages of St. Clair Town, Gala Town, and Borland.

PATH-HEAD, a considerable village in the parish of Dysart, is situate on the face of a hill looking towards the Firth of Forth; it nearly extends to the town of Kirkgate, and is divided into two districts, called Dunningker and St. Clair Town. There are several manufactories of dowlas, ticks, checks &c. carried on here. A commodious school-house was erected in this village a few years since, under the auspices of the trustees of a large endowment of the late Robert Philp, Esq. of Kirkgate.

ABBOT'S HALL, a parish and village on the south coast of the county, is in its utmost extent not more than two miles each way; its general appearance is agreeable, rising gradually from the coast northward into pretty high grounds. Raith House, the seat of Robert Ferguson, Esq. is in this parish. The village is populous, and has a considerable portion of the staple manufactures of the district.

AUCHTERTOUL, a small inland parish, four miles north-west of Kirkgate, is about two miles in length and one in breadth; the situation is elevated, and commands an extensive prospect. From a little lake, called Camilla loch, the river Teel takes its rise; on the verge of the loch are the ruins of Camilla Castle, or 'Hall-yards.' The parish contains a small village, of the same name, which is about four miles west of Kirkgate. Auchterteel is said to have been the original name of the parish, deriving the appellation from its situation on the banks of the Teel.

KENNOWAY parish, three miles long and two broad, is situated on an acclivity rising from the south to the north, and commands a delightful and extensive prospect, from its southern side, of the Firth of Forth, its islands, and the Lothians; while, from the northern extremity, the view extends over the greater part of the counties of Fife, Angus and Perth, and includes the Grampian mountains. The village of Kennoway stands at the head of a beautiful and romantic glen, the sides of which are precipitous and rocky, and contain caves, which were probably used as places of refuge, or retreats for marauders, in ancient times. Several flax spinning mills in the neighbourhood employ a number of hands. There are two annual fairs.

POST OFFICE, DYSART, Mrs. Lumsdale, Post Mistress.—Letters from LONDON and all parts of the South arrive every night at nine, and are despatched every night at a quarter before seven.—Letters from the North arrive every morning at nine, and are despatched every morning at two.

FALKLAND

Is an ancient village or small town, burgh of barony, and the capital of the parish of its name, 25 miles N. of Edinburgh, 23 s. of Dundee, 15 s. E. of Perth, the like distance N. N. W. of Kinghorn, 10 s. W. of Cupar, and 3 from Anchtर्मuchty and Strathmiglo; situate nearly in the centre of the county, on the north side of the Lomond hills, which shelter it completely from winds to the south. Falkland consists principally of one street, the eastern part of which is broad and spacious, but towards the west it is narrow and inconvenient. The few good houses in the town are of an antique character, without any pretensions to architectural excellence. The palace is the only edifice that is worthy the notice of a stranger. It was for a long time a ruin, but was rescued from total decay and repaired by the late Mr. Bruce, of the state-paper office. The excellence of the workmanship still delights the eye of the antiquarian, and gives an idea of what the building once was. The royal family of Scotland resided here occasionally; James V died here in 1542. A dungeon is shown, in which it is said the Duke of Rothesay was starved to death by his uncle Albany. Tradition reports that this victim of oppression was supported for a length of time by two females, the wives of tradesmen of Falkland, one of whom supplied bread to him through a chink in the wall of the prison, while the other conveyed the milk of her breast by means of an oaten reed; being at length discovered, these supplies were cut off, and he perished of hunger. In 1715, it is said, the famous Rob Roy garrisoned the palace with a party of the Macgregors, and laid the country under heavy contributions for miles round, and at length retired with a great booty. The town was erected into a burgh by James II in 1458, and its charter was confirmed and renewed by James VI in 1595, in order (in the words of the charter) to 'obviate the damage and inconvenience sustained, for want of inn-keepers and vicuallers, by the many prelates, peers, barons, nobles and others of their subjects, who come to their country seats.' The magistracy consists of three bailies, a treasurer, a town clerk, and fourteen councillors. A town hall was erected in 1801, in which balls and other public assemblages take place. A large common, which belonged to Falkland, and on which the inhabitants had a right to turn their cattle, &c. has lately been divided among the heritors, and is nearly all enclosed. The chief occupation of the industrious class is weaving; and the product of their looms are consigned to a number of resident agents for manufacturing houses. The Lomond hills in this district are shaped like a cone; the eastern Lomond, which is the most regular and beautiful, is about 1650 feet above the level of the town, and appears to have been fortified; the west Lomond is higher, and has on its top a large cairn or heap of loose stones.

The church is an ancient building, and contains some curious specimens of carved work. There are six fairs held here, viz. the last Thursdays in February, April, and June, all old style, the first Thursday after the 12th of August, the fourth Thursday in September, and the first Thursday in November. That in August is an extensive cattle mart, and is resorted to by English dealers.

FERRY-PORT-ON-CRAIG, WITH NEWPORT, FORGAN

AND LEUCHARS.

FERRY-PORT-ON-CRAIG, or SOUTH FERRY.—This parish is five miles in length, by from half a mile to a mile in breadth—stretching along the sea, at the mouth of the Tay, where the land rises into a hilly range, extending westwards. The village is seated at the base of the hills, opposite to Dundee and the village of Broughty, five miles from the former, with which there is a regular communication by means of ferry-boats. A great part of the village is composed of new houses, some of which are suited to the accommodation of visitors, who resort hither from the inland parts of the country for the benefit of sea-bathing, the beach here being naturally well formed for the purpose: but the chief support of the inhabitants is derived from the weaving of coarse linens, and from the salmon fishery, which is coextensive with the parish along the coast; the fish captured here are mostly sent to the London market. Besides the parish church, there is a secession chapel, and one for baptists.

FORGAN parish extends four miles in length by two in breadth, lying near the mouth of the Tay; having Ferry-Port-on-Craig on the east, Leuchars and Kilmeny on the south, and Balmerino on the west. The land generally declines to the Tay from an elevated back-ground, and is now well cultivated, inclosed, and beautifully wooded. On the shore is NEWPORT, where there is a small harbour and ferry-station opposite to Dundee. Recently some handsome villas have been erected on the slopes to the river, and a new road cut to Ferry-Port-on-Craig; like that village, Forgan has a constant communication maintained with the Dundee side by ferry. The kirk of Forgan, which is situate inland, is about eleven miles distant from Cupar, and the like distance from St. Andrew's.

LEUCHARS parish is nine miles in length by five in breadth; bounded on the east by the German ocean, and watered by the Eden on the south and south-west. The surface is level, and the soil tolerably fertile. The village of Leuchars is pleasantly situate about a mile from the coast, and six from St. Andrew's, on the road from that town to the ferry of Dundee. The majority of the inhabitants are employed in the linen manufacture. The ruins of the ancient castle of Leuchars are worthy of the traveller's notice.

INVERKEITHING,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF CROSS GATES, NORTH QUEEN'S FERRY & NEIGHBOURHOODS.

INVERKEITHING is a royal burgh and sea-port, and the capital of the parish of its name; 14 miles N. W. of Edinburgh, 31 S. of Perth, 28 E. by S. of Stirling, 13 S.W. of Kirkcaldy, and four from Dunfermline; most agreeably situate at the inner side of the bay of the Firth of Forth, on an acclivity springing from the margin of the bay, and about two miles from North Queensferry, on the great road from Edinburgh to Perth, Aberdeen, &c. Its site commands an extensive view of the south bank of the Forth, with all that is grand and picturesque in the scenery of Mid-Lothian: Edinburgh, with its magnificently seated castle and splendid buildings, lofty spires and towering monuments, bounds the eastern prospect, which is truly majestic when the morning sun beams on Arthur's Seat or Salisbury Craigs; while the passing and repassing of vessels on the river, and others lying at anchor or moored in the harbour, add greatly to the beauty of the survey. So early as the days of David I, Inverkeithing was a royal residence, and received its charter of confirmation in the reign of William the Lion. There are many remains of antiquity, some of which are coeval with the earliest periods of Scottish history. The old castle of Rosyth, the celebrated residence of Margaret, spouse of Malcolm Canmore, and subsequently of the Stuart family, still rears the fury of the storm, and rears its venerable head amidst the waters of the Forth: it is the property of the Earl of Hope-toun, whose splendid mansion stands on the opposite shore, each gaining by the contrast—the one preserved in stately magnificence, the other a mighty skeleton.

The first existing charter of Inverkeithing is one from William the Lion, confirming one of earlier but unknown date; and a subsequent charter was conferred by James VI in 1598. The government is vested in a provost and high sheriff, two bailies, a dean of guild, and a treasurer, annually elected by the councillors and deacons of the trades. The burgh joins with Dunfermline, Stirling, Culross and Queensferry in sending a member to parliament. The town consists chiefly of two streets, which are well paved and lighted; it has a neat town-house, comprising a gaol, with suitable apartments for the courts. The trade of the place consists principally in the exportation of coal, lime and freestone, which are abundant in the neighbourhood, and of excellent quality; a large distillery, a magnesia manufactory, and salt-works, are in the vicinity. The harbour is capacious and commodious, and the bay is noted as a place of security in all winds.

Besides the established church of Inverkeithing, a meeting-house, connected with the united secession synod, is at Cross Gates. There is a public school for the languages, mathematics, &c., with some private seminaries of education; the architecture of the public school is chaste and elegant, and it combines neatness with accommodation. There are two subscription libraries—one of which is furnished with an extensive collection of religious—the other with critical, philosophical, historical and miscellaneous literature; and several societies for the propagation of Christianity. The villages of CROSS GATES and NORTH QUEEN'S-FERRY are in this parish: at the former, the road from

Perth to Edinburgh, and that from Kirkcaldy to Dunfermline, intersect each other; the latter is well known to travellers, as the port opposite to Queensferry, in crossing the Forth. There are five annual fairs held at Inverkeithing, namely, on the first Wednesday in the month of March, the third Thursdays in May and June, the first Wednesday in August, and the third Wednesday in October.

KETTLE AND PITLESSIE.

KETTLE is a manufacturing village, in the parish of its name, 17 miles s. of Dundee, and four from Falkland, standing about a quarter of a mile off the main road from Fife to Cupar, nearly six miles from the latter town. It is inhabited chiefly by weavers, and there are several agents for manufacturers. The name of Kettle is of very obscure etymology; it was anciently called Katul, and in common phraseology it is invariably entitled 'the Kettle.' At one period the parish was denominated King's Kettle, from being the property of the crown. This district forms a large portion of that rich and beautiful territory on the north side of the Howe of Fife; it is exceedingly fertile throughout, with a slight exception. The river Eden bounds the parish on nearly the whole of its northern side, and in this quarter the land is still moorish. The church, which is a handsome building, with a square tower, was erected in 1832. Besides the Established Church, there is one for the Relief Synod.

PITLESSIE is a small village in the parish of Cults, two miles from Kettle, situate on the road between Kirkcaldy and Cupar, two miles from the latter town. The occupation of the inhabitants is of the same nature as those of Kettle. The parish of Cults abounds in coal and freestone, and it is generally well cultivated and enclosed. The parish is chiefly in the Howe of Fife, on the south bank of the Eden, having Ceres on the east, Kettle on the west, and Monimail on the north. The principal ornaments of this district are the mansion house and beautifully disposed pleasure grounds and plantations of Crawford Priory, which lie on the west side of the road to Cupar. Wilkie, the justly celebrated painter, is a native of the parish, his father having been minister of Cults. The ancient name of the parish was Gulkes, which signifies a nook or corner, it being dis-jointed from the large strath, which runs from east to west along the bank of the Eden.

KILCONQUHAR, WITH COLINSBURGH, ELIE

AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

THE parish of KILCONQUHAR lies on the shore of the Frith of Forth, extending in an oblong form between seven and eight miles from north to south, and varying from two to nearly five miles in breadth. The surface rises from the south, and the soil varies gradually as it recedes from the coast. The flat part of the south is a sandy soil, the rest being all of an upland character. There are many beautiful seats in the parish, of which Balcarras, the residence of Col. James Lindsay, is the chief; and there are other elegant mansions also deserving of notice. K'conquhar loch is a fine sheet of water, three quarters of a mile in length, and nearly the same in breadth, with two small islands, which harbour a few swans. This parish contains four villages, namely, Kilconquhar, Earl's Ferry (a royal burgh), Barnyards, and COLINSBURGH. The latter, which is the principal village, is 17 miles from Kirkcaldy, 11 from Cupar, the like distance from St. Andrew's, four from Largo, and one from Kilconquhar village. Colinsburgh is a thriving respectable little place, of some trade; there is a large tannery, a branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, three agencies for Insurance Companies, and a good inn. Besides the parish church of Kilconquhar, which is a remarkably elegant modern structure, there is a meeting house for independents at Colinsburgh;

at which village fairs are held on the second Wednesday in March, and the second Fridays in June and October: at Kilconquhar a fair is held on the 14th May.

ELIE is a small parish, being only about a square mile in extent, bounded on the north and west by Kilconquhar, and on the east by St. Monance, lying on the coast of the Frith of Forth. The whole, which is inclosed, is the property of Sir W. Anstruther, who has here an elegant residence. The town of Elie is six miles E. of Largo, one mile and a half from Kilconquhar, two and a half from Colinsburgh, and the like distance from St. Monance. It stands so near the sea, that the waves wash the walls of some of the houses. The harbour is said to be the deepest in the Frith of Forth, except that of Burntisland. The beach is here very fine and sandy; and the bathing being excellent, many persons of distinction resort here in the summer, but at other times it is destitute of attraction, although at some earlier period it must have been a place of more importance than it now is; for in one of the streets near the sea there are some substantial ancient residences, evidently once the habitation of families of distinction. Its trade is confined to an inconsiderable manufacture of ticks and checks, and ship-building; and the exportation is grain.

KINGHORN AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

KINGHORN is a town of considerable antiquity, and a royal burgh; three miles and a half from Kirkcaldy, and two and a half from Burntisland; occupying a pleasant situation on the side of a hill, sloping to the Frith of Forth, and exactly opposite to Leith. It consists principally of one main street, intersected by others of minor importance. An ancient building, called St. Leonard's tower, which stands in the middle of the town, was formerly used as a court-house and prison, but there is now an elegant new edifice for these purposes; and within the last fifty years very beneficial alterations have been carried into execution, whereby the appearance of the town has been greatly improved. Another new public erection, worthy of notice, is a handsome new school house; it contains school rooms for infants and for females, a common school room, and a library and museum. Kinghorn was invested with the privileges of a royal burgh by King David I, and about that time it is said to have been a royal residence. The government of the burgh is vested in a town council, consisting of a provost, two bailies, a treasurer, town clerk, &c. At the courts held by the magistrates, actions of debt to any amount, and petty criminal matters are determined.

POST OFFICE, Margaret Barclay, Post Mistress.—Letters from LONDON and all parts of the South arrive every morning at seven, and are despatched every night at ten.

and no appeal lies against their decisions, but to the court of sessions, the supreme court of judicatory, or the circuit courts. The burgh unites with those of Dysart, Kirkcaldy, and Burntisland, in sending a member to parliament.

There are two free ports attached to the burgh, the port of Kinghorn, and the port of Pettycur. Between the latter, which is about half a mile distant, and the opposite port of Leith, a ferry has been long established, and by this means the intercourse between the metropolis and the coast of Fife is rendered easy and convenient. The island of Inchkeith, distant about three miles from Pettycur, has the appearance of a barren rock; on visiting it, however, both arable and pasture lands are discovered. It also contains a small harbour and a light-house, for the security of vessels sailing up the Frith. Besides the trade connected with the port, to which several vessels belong, the chief branches are spinning, and weaving linen fabrics by hand. In the former branch there are two very respectable concerns. The places of worship are a church of the establishment, an united secession chapel, and a baptist meeting house. The 'Burgh Grammar School' is a first-rate institution.

KIRKCALDY,

OR KIRKCALDY, is a royal burgh, a populous thriving sea-port, the seat of a presbytery, and the capital of the parish of its name; 13 miles n. of Edinburgh, 31 s.w. of Dundee, three E. of Kinghorn, and one w. from Dysart; situate on the northern shore of the Frith of Forth, and stretching along the base of a range of rising grounds to the extent of about a mile. From the narrow dimensions of the site on which the town stands, the inhabitants have from the first been necessitated to build their habitations in a continuous line along the shore, though without much regard to the regularity of their structure; and having thence elongated most disproportionately, the place from an early period has been styled 'the lang town o' Kirk'ady,' in familiar allusion to its appearance. Though formerly limited to this long street, and a few diverging narrow lines, houses were in time erected on the ascent behind, or near to the shore in front; and it now comprises several well-built cross streets, and a variety of detached dwellings, the residences of the more opulent classes: so that, when viewed from the sea, the town appears environed by finely-inclosed productive fields, ornamented by the beautiful grounds and conspicuous tower of Raith, and the verdant plantations surrounding the elegant mansion of Dunniker, the seat of Lieut.-General Sir John Oswald. The prospect from the heights is of a different character, but equally delightful—embracing, as it does, the town and landscape immediately beneath and around, with a view of the busy waters of the Frith of Forth, agitated by a constant succession of vessels sailing to and fro upon its cerulean bosom. From a remote date the town of Kirkcaldy has sustained great vicissitudes and fluctuations in its commerce and prosperity. When Charles I erected it anew into a royal burgh, it had, according to tradition, one hundred ships belonging to it, and ranked as the sixth place of maritime importance in Scotland; but, in 1673, the number of vessels in its possession had decreased to twenty-five; and in 1682 its distress was so deplorable, that an application was made to the convention of burghs to consider its poverty, and to take measures for relieving it as to its public burdens: on the return of peace, in 1763, the trade of the port revived, and the quantity of shipping consequently increased and progressively augmented, so that in 1792 it boasted twenty-six vessels, carrying 3,700 tons register; from this period, Kirkcaldy has gradually risen into repute, both as a port and a manufacturing town. Its trade bears an intimate affinity with that of Dundee, consisting of the spinning of flax and the weaving of coarse linen goods, for home and foreign consumption; striped holland, dowlass, ticks, checks, sailcloths, &c., are amongst the fabrics produced from the looms of this town: the other distinguished branches comprise brewing, distilling, iron-founding, machine making, and a considerable corn and meal trade. The general commerce of the place is assisted by resident branches of four banking establishments, namely, the 'National Bank of Scotland,' the 'Commercial Bank of Scotland,' the 'Bank of Scotland,' and the 'Glasgow Bank.' There are now many elegant shops, with extensive stocks of fashionable, ornamental, and useful goods; and several excellent inns. Kirkcaldy is the seat of a custom-house, having control over a line of coast extending from Aberdour on the west to St. Andrew's on the east. The harbour has been greatly improved, and admits vessels of considerable burden, a number of which belong to the port.

The civic government of the town is confided to a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, and a treasurer; the council consists of twenty-one members, ten of whom are mariners, eight merchants, and three craftsmen. The burgh is conjoined with Kinghorn, Dysart and Burntisland in sending one member to parliament. A new edifice of large proportions, answering the several purposes of a hall for district and burgh meetings, and a gaol, was finished in 1829, superseding the old town-house; from the front of the new building rises a neat spire, in which is a conspicuous town clock.

The church, which is in the Gothic style, stands on an eminence above and at the back of the town; the other places of worship are for original burghers, baptists, episcopalians, two for united secession congregations, &c. The principal educational establishments, besides the parochial school, is Philp's institution for instructing one hundred children, of both sexes, selected from among those of the poorest inhabitants: in connexion with this charity there are schools at Path-head, Abbot's Hall, and Kinghorn. The property bequeathed by Mr. Philp for erecting and sustaining schools in these places is estimated at nearly £70,000. In virtue of this munificent endowment, a schoolhouse has been built at Kirkcaldy, and others have been or are about to be erected in different localities: the pupils are admitted between the ages of six and fifteen, and are taught only the plainest elementary branches; thirty shillings per annum is allowed for clothing each pupil. The inhabitants support two reading-rooms and a mechanics' institute; and there is a well-selected circulating library, at Mr. Crawford's, bookseller, in the High-street. The weekly market, which is held on Saturday, is a considerable one for grain; the fairs are on the first Saturdays in February, March, April, May, June and July, and on the last Wednesday in September.

LARGO,

THIS parish lies on the shore of the Frith of Forth, betwixt Newburn and Kilconquhar on the east, and Leven on the west—its inland quarter being bounded by Ceres. The parish contains two villages, one called UPPER (or KIRKTOWN of) LARGO, the other NETHER LARGO: the former is situate a mile from the sea, on the road leading from Leven to Anstruther—three miles from the former, 10 from the latter, 13 from St. Andrew's, 8½ from Cupar, six from Elie, and four from Colinsburgh. In Upper Largo, which is a very agreeable little village, stands the parish church, an ancient Gothic fabric, with a spire rising from the centre. This was the birth-place of the celebrated Scottish admiral, Sir Andrew Wood, who, in the reign of James IV, defeated the English fleet under Stephen Bull. About five years since, a new hospital was erected in this village, by virtue of an endowment made by a Mr. John Wood, a native of the place; it is a handsome building, of the Gothic architectural style: the intention of the founder was of a peculiar nature—any man 'of the name of Wood' may have admission here, to whatever part of Great Britain he may belong; the foundation provides the inmates with beds and bedding, the produce of the gardens, and £15 per ann. Nether Largo is a fishing village, one mile from Upper Largo, situate at the head of an indentation of the Frith of Forth, called Largo bay; it stands at the influx of a rivulet named the Keil, whose estuary forms a harbour to the place. This village would have remained amongst the most obscure of coast villages, but for the circumstance of its having been the birth-place of Alexander Selkirk, rendered famous by the pen of De Foe as 'Robinson Crusoe.' The house in which Selkirk was born still exists; it is an ordinary cottage of one story and a garret, and is stationed on the north side of the main street of Largo: a descendant of this person, and of the same name (Alexander Selkirk), is at this time a resident in the village, and does (or did) possess the chest once belonging to the hero of De Foe, together with the cup (formed out of a cocoa-nut) from which he drank, and the gun with which he killed his game. The weaving of linen goods is a source of emolument to the inhabitants of both villages; and some are employed in a flax spinning mill, of which Mr. Leslie is proprietor. On the west bank of the Keil are the ruins of the ancient castle of Balcarriv.

Is a burgh of barony and manufacturing town, 12 miles E. of Kinross, the like distance S. W. of Cupar, and nine N. W. of Kirkcaldy; seated along the summit of a ridge of ground rising from the Leven on the southern and a shallow vale on the northern side, and situate on the public road up the vale of Leven, leading into Kinross-shire. It consists principally of one street, running from east to west; the steps to the upper flats are on the outside of some of the houses, which is a great inconvenience to foot-passengers; many of them, however, have been removed of late years. It is a very ancient place; of this the irregularity of the streets, and the architecture of the houses (being built with the gable ends to the street), are proofs fully sufficient. Nearly all the dwellings are provided with gardens behind, and the environs display much rural beauty. At the eastern entrance to the town is a pleasant public 'green,' of a triangular figure, ornamented by a tall tree at each end: in former times this area was the scene of various pastimes, and the place of annual meeting of the pedlars or packmen of Scotland. Many improvements have been made in the burgh within the last forty years, and during that period its size has been nearly doubled: this vast increase is attributable to the prosperity of its manufactures, consisting of linens and the branches connected therewith, as flax-spinning, bleaching, &c., the works employed in which are chiefly erected on the banks of the Leven, where there are also corn-mills. Leslie is governed by two bailies and some councillors: the Earl of Rothes, who is superior of the burgh, has a seat, 'Leslie House,' at the eastern end of the town; around the mansion are some fine pleasure-grounds and agreeable plantations.

The church, which stands near the green, is a plain edifice, with a spire recently erected; there are likewise two secession chapels, and one for the original seceders. In the town are a parochial, a subscription, and an infants' school, and a subscription and a circulating library. The inhabitants of Leslie have for years taken pride to themselves for their upright dealings—as a proof of which they adduce the fact, that no writer (lawyer) is to be found in the town. Fairs are held annually on the first Tuesday in April (old style), and the Wednesday before Kinglassie fair.

LEVEN

Is a considerable village, or rather town, in the parish of Scoonie; eight miles from Kirkcaldy, four from Wemyss, and three from Largo; situate on the coast of the Frith of Forth, at the mouth of the river Leven, from which the place takes its name. The town consists of two principal streets, irregularly built, but containing some good houses; with several lanes and detached mansions. The harbour is of limited dimensions, and but few vessels can approach the quay at the same time. Over the Leven, and connecting this town with the village of Dobbieside, is a handsome suspension bridge; this useful erection cost upwards of £500, which was raised on shares by a joint-stock company. The staple trade of Leven is the preparation and spinning of flax, and the weaving of linens; the mills of the former, especially, employing a considerable number of hands. The Durie ironfoundry, a concern long established, is very extensive, and produces specimens of work that may compete with any of a similar kind in Scotland; the proprietors of these works, Messrs. Balfour and Co., have likewise a large flax-mill. A distillery belonging to Messrs. Haig and Co., a bone-dust mill, corn-mills, bleach-fields, the manufacturing of bricks and tiles, and rope and sail making, are the other leading branches carried on here. There is one principal inn, a subscription library and a news-room. Of late years this town has been considerably improved, and its trade materially augmented; so that Leven may now be pronounced one of the most thriving of the small towns in the county of Fife.

The parish church of Scoonie, which is one of the plainest in the shire, stands close to the town; there is likewise a relief church, and a congregational union chapel. Between the decayed town of Methil and the mouth of the Leven, there are some fine open downs, on which a 'golfing' society exercise their healthful amusement, and annually play for a gold and a silver medal. During the summer months, Leven is the resort of a number of respectable families from the interior, for the benefit of sea-bathing; and at the same season there is a daily communication with Largo, Dysart, and Newhaven, by means of steam-vessels.

LIMEKILNS WITH CHARLESTOWN.

LIMEKILNS is a small sea-port, in the parish of Dunfermline, three miles south of that town, situated on the north bank of the Frith of Forth. It was at one period a place of considerable trade, but at the present day its excellent harbour is chiefly made use of for the mooring of vessels. Ship-building and fish-curing are, however, now carried on in this little port; and there are several resident owners of ships, which are mostly employed in the coasting trade. An association for the insurance of vessels, likewise, has been for some years established here.

A short distance from Limekilns is the village and port of CHARLESTOWN, the property of the Earl of Elgin, who has formed a commodious harbour and pier, and built residences for the men employed at his extensive lime works in the vicinity: from hence enormous quantities of limestone are exported annually; it is likewise the shipping port for the Elgin and Wellwood collieries. The accommodations found at the harbour here, for loading and unloading vessels, are most excellent. There are also a ship-building yard, a manufactory for salt, and a good inn.

MARKINCH AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

THE parish of MARKINCH is bounded by Kennoway on the east; on the west by Dysart, Kinglassie, and Leslie; on the north by Falkland and Kettle, and on the south by Wemyss: it extends from north to south five miles and a half, by a mean breadth of two, its southern end being considerably wider. The parish has a general slope towards the south; it is under the best state of cultivation, enclosure, and plantation—and must be ranked amongst the most beautiful parts of this shire: it is traversed by the streams of the Leven and the Orr, and the great road through the county crosses it. The village of Markinch stands near the centre of the parish, at the distance of ten miles s. of Cupar, and eight n. e. of Kirkcaldy: it occupies an open situation, on a piece of irregular rising ground; and on the highest part of the eminence is seated the church. Weaving of linens is the principal employment of the inhabitants, and a woollen manufactory adds to the industrious aspect of the place; in the neighbourhood are two paper-mills and three bleach-fields, and the district abounds in coal. The parish contains Balgonie Castle, one of the seats of the Earl of Leven, and from whence his eldest son takes the title of baron: the castle is an edifice of great antiquity and strength; it stands on the south bank of the Leven, in the midst of some fine woods. About half a mile to the east is the castle of Balfour, surrounded by pleasing plantations and inclosures; and in a delightful situation is the house (or castle) of Balbirnie, a good substantial mansion. Besides Markinch, the parish comprises two or three villages of lesser note, possessing no object worthy of description; amongst these, however, the village of Dnbbside is an exception—a neat little place on the coast, and an agreeable resort for sea-bathers from the adjacent more inland district. The places of worship in Markinch consist of a church of the establishment, and a united secession chapel. Three annual fairs are entitled to be held within this parish, little or no importance, however, is attached to them.

NEWBURGH,

WITH THE PARISHES OF ABBIE, BALMERINO AND CREICH.

NEWBURGH is a royal burgh, sea-port and the capital of the parish of its name, 15 miles s. w. of Dundee, 11 s. e. of Perth, 10 n. w. of Cpar, and 5 n. of Auchtermuchty, advantageously seated on the south bank of the Tay, and consists of one long street in the direction of east and west, parallel with the course of the river, and a lane or two leading towards the shore, where there are convenient quays for the shipping of merchandize, and a spacious harbour; the Tay above, being navigable only for vessels of about 200 tons, those of greater burden put in here to discharge their cargoes, which are sent to Perth by lighters. The period when this town was called into existence is uncertain, but that it is of considerable antiquity is unquestionable; according to some authorities, its origin is ascribed to the fostering patronage of the adjacent abbey, and the name of New-burgh supposed to have been conferred upon it in contradistinction to the ancient decayed burgh of Abernethy, which lies about two miles to the west. Formerly the greater proportion of the habitations were low-built and roofed with thatch, but of late years a better style of architecture has prevailed, and there are now many good houses. The town hall, which stands near the centre of the town, is a neat modern building; and the church, nearly opposite to it, is a handsome new edifice. At an early period the town was erected into a burgh of regality, and in 1631 Charles I granted to the place a charter, forming the community into a royal burgh: in virtue of which grant Newburgh sent a commissioner to the Scottish estates; but being unable to pay his expenses, which was then the custom, the burgh, upon petition, was relieved from the burden of parliamentary distinction, and it has never since been oppressed by representative honours. The government is vested in two bailies and fifteen councillors, with a town clerk. Within the last forty or fifty years Newburgh has risen very considerably in wealth and outward appearance, through the industrious habits of its population, and the traffic carried on at its port. The manufacture of linen goods may be considered the staple of the place, and there are many agents of great respectability. Exclusive of its staple, the trade in corn and timber is by no means inconsiderable; of the former especially, large exports are made. To the parish of Newburgh many

PITTENWEEM AND ST. MONANCE.

PITTENWEEM is a royal burgh and sea-port, in the parish of its name; 24 miles N. N. E. of Edinburgh, 21 s. w. of Kirkcaldy, 10 s. of St. Andrew's, and five s. s. w. of Crail; situate on the coast of the Frith of Forth, one mile from Wester Anstruther, and occupying rather an elevated site of ground above the harbour. It consists of an irregular main street, with a few bye thoroughfares, the houses generally bearing an ancient aspect. The dwellings around the harbour are of a respectable appearance; and over this part of the town stand the remains of the priory of Pittenweem, the date of which is not with certainty known; exclusive of some fragments of the religious edifice, there is a quadrangular range of curious antique buildings entire, said to have been the residence of the prior, and other superior officers of the establishment. These remains exhibit a fine specimen of the domestic ecclesiastical architecture of the ages anterior to the reformation: they are included within the private property of the Rev. Dr. Low, a bishop of the episcopal church of Scotland, who here superintends a congregation of that communion, and resides in one of these venerable structures. Adjacent to the monastic ruins stands the parish church, an old edifice with a turreted spire. Pittenweem was constituted a royal burgh by James V, in 1537; it is governed by four bailies, a treasurer, and nineteen councillors; and joins with Cupar, St. Andrew's, the Anstruthers, Crail and Kilmerny in sending one member to parliament. Between the period of Pittenweem being erected into a royal burgh and 1639, it should seem that it was a place of considerable note and trade; but, from the latter period to the year 1645, it suffered severely—no fewer than thirteen sail of large vessels, belonging to this port, having been either taken by the enemy or wrecked. It was likewise, in more recent times, a fishing station of some importance; but in this branch it also has, unfortunately, materially declined. Fish-curing is now the prevailing branch at this place, in addition to which the trade in grain is of some consequence.

Exclusive of the parish church, there is an episcopalian place of worship and a relief church. It was in Pittenweem that the robbery was committed upon the collector of the excise by Wilson and Robertson, which led to the outrages of the Porteous mob and the consequent catastrophe: the house in which this transaction took place is still standing, on the south side of the street, west of the town-house.

The village or small town of ST. MONANCE (or St. Monans) is one mile and a half from Pittenweem, on the same coast as the latter place. There is a small harbour attached to it: at one period it was ranked amongst the most considerable fishing stations on the coast of Fife, and its inhabitants still pursue that avocation. St. Monance is a burgh of barony, governed by three bailies, a treasurer, and twelve councillors. Lying away from the direct thoroughfare along the shore of the Forth, it is comparatively seldom visited, and is, therefore, but locally known. From the adjacent country its little church alone is visible, standing on the height above the houses, and so near to the sea as to be occasionally wet with its foam; it is a curious old Gothic edifice. Until the year 1646, the name of the parish was Abercrombie, or Inverny; its present name is derived from St. Monan, a martyr celebrated for his miracles in Fife and the adjacent Isle of May.

ST. ANDREW'S

As a city, royal burgh, and sea-port—and the most interesting town, as regards its ecclesiastical history, in North Britain; 39 miles N. E. of Edinburgh, and 10 miles from Cupar, Anstruther and Crail; situate in the parish and bay of its name, into the latter of which the river Eden, and a small stream called the Kinley, empty themselves. Its history is mingled with the civil and ecclesiastical annals of Scotland, especially the latter; but the narrow space within which the proprietors of the present work are confined, in their descriptive notice of towns, denies to them the gratifying task of performing that ample justice to these subjects which their importance demand, and which have been so ably and elaborately treated by the authors of the 'Gazetteer of Scotland.'

The city of St. Andrew's in 1410 first saw the establishment of its university, which was the earliest of the kind in Scotland—it originated with Bishop Wardlaw, a magnificent and liberal-minded prelate; in 1411 it was endowed by a charter. The college of St. Salvador was erected by Bishop Kennedy in 1456, that of St. Leonard in 1512, and that of St. Mary, or the divinity college, in 1537; in 1747 the institutions of St. Salvador and St. Leonard were united, by parliamentary statute. There is an university library, to which the students as well as professors have access, upon paying five shillings of matriculation fees. The united college has a chancellor, rector, and principal; with professors of Greek, logic, natural philosophy, moral philosophy, humanity, civil history, mathematics, and natural history. The college of St. Mary's is an institution of far less consequence; it consists of a principal, and professors of divinity, church history, and oriental languages. The site of the new Madras college is on the south side of the South-street, immediately behind and comprehending within it that fine old ruin the Black Friars, which will thus be associated with an improved system of education for centuries to come—uniting, tastefully and appropriately, something of the splendour of departed with much of the elegance and usefulness of present times. This noble institution, which was endowed by the late Dr. Bell, the distinguished founder of several similar establishments, both in this and in other towns of Scotland, cannot fail to secure to his memory, for years and for ages to come, that veneration and esteem to which, as a benefactor of his race, he is so well entitled. The architectural plan was made by William Burn, Esq., architect, Edinburgh, and the foundation stone laid on the 9th April, 1832. Exclusive of these colleges, the city possesses a good grammar and English school; and there are a few private classical and boarding seminaries.

The town originally consisted of four streets: Swallow-street (which has for centuries disappeared), towards the sea; North-street, in which a number of elegant edifices are now erected, together with the buildings of the united college, partly old and partly new; Market-street, which runs through the middle of the town, and is deformed by a town-house and gaol which occupy its centre, like the 'Heart of Mid-Lothian' in Edinburgh; and South-street, which is spacious and well paved, terminating towards the east in a beautiful view of the ruins of the cathedral, and towards the west in a fine arched entrance, being the old city gate. The streets all concentrate towards the old cathedral, and the still more ancient turret or tower of Regulus, or, as it is more commonly called, 'St. Rule.' In this quarter still stands a great part of the magnificent wall reared by Prior John Hepburn in 1516: it runs along the south side of the town, and contains fourteen round and square towers, each having a niche on the outside for a saint; the whole length of the wall is about 870 feet, and appears one of the most interesting relics in the place. From the top of St. Regulus' tower there is a beautiful view of the Bell rock, the bay, the city, and the surrounding country. The ruins (daily and rapidly decreasing) of the once formidable castle, in which Cardinal Beaton was murdered, lie towards the north-east, and jut out into the sea, which in another century will manifestly sweep them from the face of the earth. The 'witch lake' is immediately above the old castle, and is memorable, as the name imports, from the service in which it has been employed—the ordeal trial and almost consequent destruction of witches: immediately adjoining is the 'with hill,' leading to the 'butts,' where archery was practised in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries.

As before stated, St. Andrew's is a royal burgh, by virtue of a charter conferred by David I, which was confirmed by Malcolm II, the unfortunate monarch who was slain at Glamis castle in 1034; the charter, together with the silver keys of the city, and the axe which was used for the decapitation of Sir Robert Spottiswoode and some other loyalists, are still to be seen in the town-house. The city is governed by a provost, a dean of guild, and four bailies, with a treasurer; the dean of guild has precedence of the bailies; the provost need not reside on the spot, and he may be re-elected every year for life. There are seven incorporated trades in the burgh; it joins with Cupar, the Anstruthers, Kilrenny, Pittenweem, and Crail, in returning a member to parliament. St. Andrew's enjoyed, at one period, an extensive foreign trade; and so lately as the reign of Charles I, it owned from thirty to forty trading vessels. At present the chief trade is in coal—English from Newcastle, and Scotch from Alloa. The harbour, which was originally much larger than it now is, was widened and deepened during the summer of 1836, by the present reform magistrates, who, on this as well as on other occasions, have evinced the liveliest attention to the comfort, beauty, and best interests of the city; a lighthouse is erected at the extremity of the pier. The manufacture of golf balls is carried on here, perhaps to a greater extent than in any other town in Scotland: it is calculated that three hundred dozen of these balls are made annually for the company of gollers, and others, of this city alone; and that upwards of eight thousand balls are exported from hence, within the same period, to Edinburgh, Glasgow, Aberdeen, Perth and other places.

Nearly opposite St. Mary's college, on the north side of the street, stands the town church, erected in the twelfth century; it is in good preservation and repair, and is crowded with seats and galleries: within the door, and on the right side, is the splendid monument of Archbishop Sharp, erected by his son in 1769; it is composed of white marble; the figure of the prelate is represented in the attitude of kneeling, and below is exhibited, in relief, the assassination of this ecclesiastical dignitary. Besides the two parish churches, there are burgher, independent, and episcopal chapels; the latter is an exceedingly neat little edifice, and is generally and deservedly admired. St. Andrew's, whether as regards its early importance in the history of Scotland, with which it is so intimately associated—its numerous relics of antiquity, which everywhere arrest the eye—its venerable religious edifices, and its seminaries of learning—must be admitted to be a place possessing undying excellence to the mind of the antiquary, and replete with interest to the well-informed historian, the contemplative tourist, and the casual visitor. The market is held on Monday; and there are six annual fairs, namely, on the second Thursday in April, the 23d of May, the first Tuesday in July, the 1st of August, and the 30th of November—all old style, except the last.

STRATHMIGLO

IS a small town and capital of the parish of its name, three miles from Falkland, and nearly two from Auchtermuchty, situate in a pleasant plain, on the north bank of the Miglo or Eden, and consists chiefly of one irregular street, with lanes diverging at right angles. The town-house stands about the centre of the principal street: it has a square steeple, at the top of which is a balcony surrounded by balustrades, the whole being surmounted by a spire near eighty feet high; from the front of the steeple projects a stone pillar, which formerly served for a sun-dial, now much defaced; above which are the arms of the house of Burleigh. By charter, in 1600, the detached portions or feus were erected into a burgh of barony, and this grant was confirmed by James VI, in 1605, but the nomination of haillies and admittance of burgeses was vested in the person of the superior. Within the last sixty years a village has been built on the opposite side of the Miglo, called the Fens of Westercash. Between the old town and this new village is a beautiful square and level meadow, called the Towngreen, intersected by the Miglo, and belonging to the burgh. A justice of peace court is held on the second Monday in every month alternately with Falkland. There is but little trade belonging to the place—that which it does enjoy is of the nature with the staple of the county, being bleaching and linen weaving. The church is a plain building, standing at the entrance of the town. A fair is held on the last Friday in June.

TORRYBURN WITH NEWMILLS.

THE parish of TORRYBURN lies at the south west corner of the county, and extends along the shore of the Firth of Forth, between the parish of Dunfermline on the east, and that of Culross on the west, and measures from four to five miles in length by about two in breadth. The parish, which is formed by the union of the baronies of Torry and Crombie, derives its name from the Gaelic word Torry, signifying the 'King's Height,' and burn, the Scottish word for rivulet. The village of Torryburn stands on Crombie point, a promontory on the Firth, at the distance of 17 miles s. w. of Kirkcaldy, 9 w. of North Queensferry, 6 E. of Kincardine, and 2 E. of Culross. The situation of the village is pleasant and healthy, and the inhabitants, who are remarkable for their peaceable disposition and industrious habits, are chiefly employed in weaving, and some of the females in tambouring. From the rocky state of the shore it has been found impossible to form a harbour here; but a pier has been erected at Crombie point, where passengers and goods are landed, and at which steam boats touch in going to Leith, Alloa and Stirling. Within the boundary of the parish, near Culross, is the village of NEWMILLS; which, for trade or otherwise, does not require particular notice. A fair is held at Torryburn on the second Wednesday in July.

WEMYSS (EAST & WEST), BUCKHAVEN & METHIL.

EAST WEMYSS, in the parish of its name, is six miles from Kirkcaldy, and four from Dysart, situate on the Frith of Forth, and consists principally of a single street. In this village the manufacture of linen fabrics is carried on rather extensively. A school has been erected here within these few years, by Lady Emma Wemyss, in which children of both sexes are taught gratuitously. About one mile hence is the village of West Wemyss, a burgh of barony, and much more respectable in appearance than East Wemyss, having a good harbour at its western extremity, and several vessels belonging to it employed in the exportation of coals. A short way, east, from hence, on the brink or face of an eminence, and surmounted on the land side by beautiful plantations and pleasure grounds, is Wemyss House, the seat of Capt. Wemyss; and in the same direction, but farther on, is the ancient castle of Wemyss, now a complete ruin. This massive structure crowns the height above the shore, commanding a most extensive view seaward; it has the reputation of being one of the castles of the Macduffs, Earls of Fife. Near this spot are several extensive excavations at the base of the cliffy bank, partly natural and partly artificial—one of these caves is called the King's Cave. At the village of BUCKHAVEN, one mile from Wemyss, a new harbour is to be erected for the accommodation of the boats on this fishery station, which is one of the most considerable on this line of coast. It is estimated that the expense of this praiseworthy improvement will exceed £4,000. This village, as well as that of the decayed town of METHIL, are principally inhabited by fishermen and weavers. The parish of Wemyss extends four miles along the coast, from a mile to a mile and a half inland from the shore. The land has a quick descent to the coast, and is occasionally precipitous: but from the head of these descents it spreads away inland in fine inclined planes, exhibiting arable fields, pasture lands, and plantations, all in the best state. Much to the inconvenience of the inhabitants, there is no post office at either of the villages in this parish, Dysart being the post town.

FORFARSHIRE,

OR ANGUS.—This county is bounded on the east by the German Ocean, on the west by Perthshire, on the north by the counties of Aberdeen and Kincardine, the latter lying also on its north-eastern verge; on the south, the Firth of Tay is its boundary, as likewise is Perthshire for a short distance: its extent from north to south is about thirty-seven miles, and from east to west nearly forty. Its figure is, perhaps, the most uniform of any county in Scotland; and but for an indentation on its western side, caused by the intrusion of a part of Perthshire, it would describe almost a perfect square. The contents of its area has been variously estimated—perhaps about 850 square miles may be taken as between the conflicting computations: of cultivated acres there are about 200,000, and of uncultivated, perhaps, 360,000; the space occupied by lakes is not considerable. The district of ANGUS (now Forfarshire), with the contiguous county of Kincardine on the north, anciently formed the country of the Horesti, and a portion of the Pictish kingdom. On the dissolution of that government by Kenneth II, about the end of the ninth century, he is said to have divided it between his two brothers, Angus and Mearns, from whom the two counties derived their appellation. The district gave the title of Earl to two different families: on the extinction of the first, the earldom was conferred on a relation of King David Bruce; and in 1477 it merged in the family of the Douglasses: it has since devolved on the Duke of Hamilton. There are a number of old ruinous castles in this county, most of which have fallen to decay, in consequence of the baronies on which they stand having passed into the hands of proprietors of other estates.

SOIL, PRODUCE, and MANUFACTURES.—The great level valley of Strathmore runs through the centre of the county from east to west; and the lines of hills which flank this extensive and fine tract of country, with the Grampians on the north, and some minor ranges on the south, may be said to form this district into a series of continuous ridges, generally pursuing a direction from west to east, interrupted occasionally by the different rivers and streams coursing to the sea. The portion of the Grampian mountains in this shire is diversified by many beautiful valleys; and from the summit of these elevations to the ocean on the east, and the Tay on the south, the surface of the land may be considered an inclined plane. From the aerial region of the highest Grampian an extensive and well-varied prospect is presented, not only of almost the whole country adjoining the Tay, and of the ocean, but of the eastern part of the peninsula of Fife, the coast of East Lothian, and the heights of Lammermoor. The capabilities of Forfarshire for agriculture continued for centuries in that dormant state which characterized most other parts of Scotland; but it cannot escape observation, at the present day, that this district is completely emancipated from the reproach of inattention to husbandry; that it now exhibits a lively spirit and practically enlightened system of farming, and consequently a just appreciation of the advantages of this most useful of all sciences. Within the last fifty years, the farmers of this county have kept at least equal pace, in the improvements adopted, with those of similarly situated divisions of the country; and the wealth of Forfarshire has been steadily increasing, both from its agricultural and its manufacturing products. The general drainage of the land has been proceeded in to a great and beneficial extent; and several lochs, particularly that of Rescobie, have been drawn off, for the purpose of obtaining shell-marl, which has long been in high repute with the agriculturists in their respective neighbourhoods: the introduction of bone manure has been followed by the most profitable results. The sowing of permanent pasture grasses and turnips is persevered in to a broad and lucrative amount; and the quantity of ground appropriated to tillage is annually augmenting. The improvement of live stock has been in proportional advance with that of cultivation, and has been materially facilitated by the zealous co-operation of the various agricultural societies. In traversing the lower parts of the shire, beautiful inclosures and plantations meet the eye in every parish; and by the formation of excellent roads, in all directions, a pleasing inducement is now held for travelling through this progressively prospering county. The planting of waste lands in this county seems to have made very little progress till about the middle of the last century, and when, at length, this sure source of future profit suggested itself, Scotch firs were the only sort of trees planted in such situations. More recent planters introduced the larch, as a more valuable species of timber, and adapted, as they thought, to every variety of soil and situation, but experience has now exploded this latter notion; for, it has been profitably proved that, by the operation of draining, the moors and waste lands produce excellent oak and beech, of which a number of proprietors have been for some time planting extensively. From the mouth of the Tay to near the Westhaven, the coast is sandy—having, from thence eastward, many sunken rocks. Within a mile to the east of Arbroath, the shore becomes bold and rocky, presenting dreadful precipices to the sea, perforated with caverns by the incessant and insidious workings of the waves: the ‘Redhead,’ a promontory upwards of two hundred feet in perpendicular height, is the most striking feature of this rocky front; it forms the south point of Lunan Bay, and exposes a beautiful beach to the ocean for nearly three miles. This county is not distinguished for its mineral treasures. Of limestone, which is found in various parts, there are immense tracts in the Grampians; but, from the expense of conveying coal to burn it, this natural product, so valuable under other circumstances, is not wrought to any extent, except in the neighbourhood of Montrose, at Buddin (on the north side of Lunan Bay), and in the vicinity of Brechin. Freestone is plentiful in almost every parish; the colour is various, but in no instance so white and beautiful as the stone of Fife or Mid-Lothian. The Arbroath paving-stone is well known, and has a ready sale in London and Edinburgh. Lead has been found in several places, and was at one time wrought to a limited amount in the parish of Lochlee. But, unfortunately for its local interests, this county is destitute of coal—at least no vestige of this invaluable fossil has yet been discovered: the whole district is, therefore, dependent on the Fife and Newcastle collieries for this essential article of domestic comfort and manufacturing facility. The fisheries of Forfarshire are of great importance; those of the North and South Esk, and the coast of the county, are at the present time very valuable; and the mode of packing salmon in boxes of ice, for the London market, is a practice which has proved of peculiar advantage to those connected with that branch of the fishery. The MANUFACTURES of Forfar are of very high consequence; and as Fifehire is celebrated for the production of the finer linen fabrics, so is this county noted for the manufacture of the coarser hempen goods, wrought up from foreign materials: the spinning of yarn in large mills is carried on to a prodigious extent. Dundee, Arbroath and Montrose are its principal trading ports: the two first named enjoy pre-eminence in the making of sailcloths, Osnaburghs, sackings, dowlasses, and other linen textures; Brechin participates largely with other places in the preparation of flax; and the towns of Forfar, Montrose and Kerriemuir are seats of material manufacturing importance. Exclusive of these particular stations, the inhabitants of all the little towns and villages are industriously employed in weaving the already prepared materials into cloth, and in the process of bleaching.

RIVERS and LOCHS.—The principal rivers are the NORTH and SOUTH Esk, which rise near each other on the northern confines of the county; the former originates from Loch Lee, which is filled by the water of the Lee, after being joined by the Unich, which latter forms several beautiful cascades. The tributaries of the North Esk are the Luther, the Cruick, the West Water, the Tarf, and the Mark; enriched with these streams, it falls into the sea three miles from Montrose, The South Esk passes through the centre of the county, receiving in its progress the contributory waters of the Noran, the Lemno, the Carity, and the Prosen; and enters the ocean at Montrose. The third river in point of size is the ISLA, which rises near the sources of the Esks: it receives, near Meigle, the Dean—the Carleet, a little above Glammis—and the romantic burn of Glammis, near the castle; and, turning westward into Perthshire, it joins the Tay at Kinclaven. There are also two lesser rivers, the DIGHTY and the LUNAN: the former proceeds from some small lakes in the parish of Lundie, and falls into the mouth of the Tay, east from Broughty-ferry; the latter conveys the waters of the lakes of Rescobie and Balgives to the sea, at Lunan bay: the Lunan is famous for its eels, and the other rivers abound with different variations of the trout and salmon. In the enumeration of rivers yielding wealth to this county, the TAY must not be omitted (though this district cannot claim its origin), being by far the most valuable, from its adaptation to the purposes of commerce: it has its source in the western extremity of Perthshire (where it is called the Fillan), and after winding through delightful scenery, the beauties of which are heightened by its sparkling waters, it becomes an estuary or firth; and about eight miles below Dundee it expands into the bay of St. Andrew's, and loses its distinction in the wide reservoir of the German ocean. The lakes of most consequence are Loch Lee, in the parish of its name; Loch Brandy, in the parish of Clova; the Loch of Forfar, near that town; the Lochs of Rescobie, of Lundie, and Lentrathen, in the respective parishes so denominated; and of Balgives, in the parish of Aberlemno. None of these are of great magnitude—indeed few, if any, are more than a mile in extent; and there is nothing peculiar in their qualities or situations.

Forfarshire comprises fifty-two complete parishes, and four parts of parishes; in which are five Royal and Parliamentary Burghs, namely, DUNDEE, ARBROATH, MONTROSE, BRECHIN, and FORFAR: the four last-named burghs, with Inverhervie (in Kincardineshire), unite in sending a member to the senate; the town of DUNDEE also returns one, and the COUNTY one. The eminences of greatest altitude in this shire are—Hill of Dundee, 525; Dunnichen Hill, 720; Belmont, 759; Sidlaw, 1,406; Craigowl, 1,600; Oathlaw, one of the Grampians, 2,264; and Mount-Battock, 3,465 feet above the level of the sea.

ABERLEMNO, CARESTON, FEARN, MENMUIR,

STRICKATHROW AND TANNADICE.

ABERLEMNO parish lies on the banks of the South Esk, where it is joined by the rivulet called the Lemno, and about twelve miles from the sea-coast. The land is undulating and fertile, and agriculture is pursued with spirit and success. In the parish church-yard, which is about six miles south-west from Brechin, is an antique obelisk, covered with hieroglyphics, erected to commemorate a signal victory obtained over the pertinacious Danes near this place.

The parish of CARESTON (or Canadston) lies betwixt Brechin and Tannadice, on the north bank of the South Esk and of the Noran water. The land is composed of beautiful well-cultivated braes, sloping to the south. In the parish are two artificial mounds; one is said to have been raised for judicial deliberations, the other for the execution of capital offenders.

FEARN (or Fern) parish lies at the foot of some of the Grampian hills; is intersected by the Cruick water, and bounded on the south by that of the Noran. The surface presents rich pastoral hills, and low grounds finely cultivated and inclosed; with extensive plantations of fir and other timber. Near the Noran stands the formerly celebrated 'Vain Castle,' now a ruinous empty skeleton; it is about six miles west of Brechin.

The parish of MENMUIR is about five miles long and two broad. The southern part is flat, and forms the vale of the Cruick water; to the north it is hilly and heathy. It is about four miles north of Brechin.

STRICKATHROW parish is about seven miles long and two broad; corn, black cattle, and flax, are the principal products. The church-yard, which is about four miles from Brechin, is said to have been the scene of the surrender of the crown of Scotland, by John Balliol, to Edward I, in 1296; in the same cemetery are three tomb-stones, said by tradition to mark the graves of three Danish generals. In the north-western part of the parish rises the conspicuous hill of Lundie.

TANNADICE is situate nearly in the centre of the county, extending about twelve miles in length by from four to eight in breadth. Along the western border of the parish passes the South Esk river, and on the eastern side courses the Noran water; on the banks of these streams the land is finely inclosed, cultivated and planted, and exhibits a variety of romantic scenes. The village of Tannadice is pleasantly situate on the north bank of the Esk,  $7\frac{1}{2}$  miles from Brechin.

ARBROATH,

FORMERLY called Aberbrothock, is a royal burgh, a sea-port, and the seat of a presbytery; 60 miles N. N. E. of Edinburgh, 17 S. S. E. of Dundee, 15 S. E. of Forfar, and 12 S. of Montrose; situate on a small plain, on the coast of the German ocean, and surrounded on the west, north and east by eminences, in the form of an amphitheatre. It is a town of early origin, owing its rise to an important monastic institution, founded here by William the Lion, about the year 1178: the remains of this edifice are strikingly picturesque, and consist of ruinous towers of the most solid construction, columns overthrown and broken in pieces, Gothic windows, cloisters, staircases, &c.; all exhibiting as well the ravages of time as the effects of religious zeal. The church of this abbey has been a most magnificent fabric; a part of the abbot's lodgings, which stands a little distant from the church, still remains. The monks first came from Kelso, and Reginaldus (a monk of Tyrone) was its first abbot. The abbots of this foundation had privileges which others did not enjoy—they were exempted from assisting at the yearly synods, and had the distinction of making use of and wearing the pontifical ornaments. King Robert the Bruce granted ten marks sterling to the abbey; King John conferred on the inhabitants of the place the same privileges that his subjects enjoyed, throughout all England, except in his city of London.

The town consists of one street, nearly half a mile in length, running north and south from the sea, and another on the west side of smaller extent; these are intersected by cross streets. Eastward of the town, and locally situate in the parish of St. Vigeans, there are two elegant streets, at the top of one of which a chapel of ease is erected; on the west side of the river Brothock are also several streets of modern erection, consisting chiefly of small houses, forming a suburb of considerable size. A new town-house, which was erected in 1812, and the trades' hall (in Horner's wynd), add much to the beauty of the town; the streets, which have also been greatly improved, are now clean, and, with the principal shops, are lighted with gas. At the commencement of the eighteenth century Aberbrothock enjoyed no other trade than that of fishing; it had no claim as a manufacturing place, and the little cloth that it did produce was taken to Montrose for sale: nothing was directly imported except a small cargo of wood, occasionally, from Norway; flax, iron, and other useful commodities, were purchased from the merchants of Dundee and Montrose. About the year 1738, the manufacture of coarse linens was introduced by the following accident: a weaver in the town, having a small quantity of flax unfit for the kind of cloth then usually brought to market, made it into a web, and offered it to another of the inhabitants at a price by which he was willing to be a loser; the purchaser, having previously been in Germany, remarked a similarity between this piece of cloth and the manufacture of Osnaburgh, and prevailed upon the weaver to make trial of other webs of the same texture; the experiment succeeded—a company was established, and other parts of the county soon availed themselves of the discovery. The staple of Arbroath, at the present day, is the manufacture of sail cloth, canvass and other coarse linens; the preparation and spinning of the yarns for these productions of the loom is carried on most extensively, by numerous individuals and firms of the first respectability. In addition to these important branches, there are various other concerns of magnitude, including two iron foundries, the like number of ship-building yards (with a patent slip), two extensive tanneries, roperies, alkali manufactories, several breweries, &c.; and a considerable trade exists in the exportation of grain. The number of vessels belonging to the port is 75, of an aggregate burden of 6,150 tons. The harbour is small, but well sheltered; it is provided with a neat signal-tower for communication with the Bell (or Inch Cape) Rock, rising from the German ocean, about twelve miles in a south-eastern direction from Arbroath. Of this rock, and the tradition attached to it, a most entertaining account will be found in Messrs. Chambers' 'Gazetteer.' On 'the Rock' is a lighthouse, the first stone of which was laid in July, 1808, and the beacon first gleamed over the deep on the 1st February, 1811. At the lighthouse there are a principal light-keeper and three assistants; each, in his turn, goes on shore at the end of every six weeks, with liberty to remain a fortnight: in the town there are buildings erected where each keeper has apartments for the accommodation of his family; and connected with the establishment is a very neat signal-tower in the harbour; this structure is fifty feet in height, and furnished with an excellent telescope; and signals are arranged with the persons at the lighthouse for the attending vessel, the master of which has charge of the signal-tower and of the stores at Arbroath. The commerce of the place is facilitated by three banking establishments, viz., the 'Arbroath Banking Company,' a branch of the 'Dundee Union Bank,' and one of the 'British Linen Company.' There are two superior inns—the 'George,' in Horner's wynd, and Seaton's Hotel and Posting-house, in High-street. A savings' bank has been successfully instituted, as the benefits resulting from it have been duly appreciated by the inhabitants; and a subscription library, in High-street, and a commercial news-room, on the Shore, are well supported.

Arbroath is a very ancient royalty; but there is no certainty as to the origin of its burghal privileges, in consequence of the loss of charters, in the incessant troubles which disordered the state during the minority of James VI: it is the general opinion, however, that the town was constituted a royal burgh by the same monarch that founded its celebrated abbey. It is governed by a provost, two bailies, and a treasurer, and fifteen town councillors; and it has seven incorporated trades. It unites with Forfar, Montrose, Brechin and Inverbervie in sending a member to the legislature. A burgh court is held weekly for the trial of petty civil actions and criminal cases of minor enormity.

There are no fewer than thirteen places of worship in the town and suburbs of Arbroath; their names, denominations and respective sites, with the ministers officiating in each, will be seen at page 420. A new and elegant steeple, 150 feet in height, has within these few years been added to the church. St. Vigean's chapel of ease is a very handsome modern structure. In addition to the religious edifices already so numerous, a new church is now in progress of erection at Shore. Arbroath has an excellent academy, under a rector and two other teachers, gentlemen of high professional character; there are likewise an excellent parochial school, and several private seminaries. The market is held on Saturday, and the fairs on the 31st January, and the third Wednesdays of June and July.

AUCHTERHOUSE,

LIFF AND BENVIE, LUNDIE, MAINS, MURROES, STRATHMARTIN, AND TEALING.
 THE parish of AUCHTERHOUSE lies in the south-west corner of the county, about seven miles n. w. of Dundee, and situate on the south of the Sidlaw hills. The road from Dnddee to Meigle (in Perthshire) passes through the parish, which comprises four thousand acres, chiefly of arable land.
 LIFF AND BENVIE is an united parish, the latter incorporated with the former in 1758. The district, which lies immediately west of Dundee, with a portion touching the Tay, is generally well cultivated, and beneath the surface freestone and slate abound. There are within the parish the villages of Liff, Benvie, and Luchoy.
 LUNDIE parish is situate in the western part of the county: the parish of Foulis-Easter, in Perthshire, was united to it in 1618. Conjointly the district forms a productive well-cultivated tract of country, embellished with plantations, and irrigated by several small lakes, of which Lundie loch is one. The church of Foulis, which was founded by Sir Andrew Gray for a provost and some prebendaries, is still perfectly entire, although it was built in the year 1142.

MAINS (or Mains of Fintry), formerly called Strath-dighty, is a parish lying immediately north of that of Dundee, and chiefly in the vale of the river Dighty, which intersects the parish into nearly two equal parts in its course to the Tay. From the banks of the stream the ground rises gently to the north and south; and the country has a most pleasant aspect, being well inclosed with thorn hedges, and ornamented with fine trees and thriving plantations. On the Dighty are several mills; and near the left bank of the river is the extensive bleachfield of Claverhouse—at no great distance from which was the seat of General Grahame, whose title of ‘Claverhouse’ (applied from this his patrimonial estate) once sounded such alarm in Scotland. The Grahames of Fintry were one of the oldest families in this part of the country. Freestone and slate quarries supply some occupation in this parish.

part of the county, bounded by Dundee on the south and Monifeth on the east; lying on the road from Brechin to Dundee, from which latter it is about five miles distant. The greater part of the parish is arable, and it is now adorned with some plantations.

STRATHMARTIN is a small parish, about two miles square, lying in the pleasant and beautiful vale which is watered by the Dighty; having Tealing on the north, Auchterhouse on the west, and Liff and Mains on the south, the latter parish also abutting on the east.

TEALING parish, situate on the south side of the Sidlaw chain, is about four miles in length, and from one to two in breadth; it is watered by the small river Firthie, a tributary stream to the Dighty. In this parish are found grey slate, moorstone and freestone. John Glass, founder of the sect appropriately denominated ‘Glassites,’ was minister of Tealing anterior to his open separation from the church of Scotland.

MURROES (or Muirhouse) parish is in the southern

BARRIE, CARNOUSTIE, PANBRIDE, MUIRDRUM,

AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BARRIE is a village in the parish of its name, ten miles east of Dundee, and not quite that distance south-west of Arbroath; situate on the road from the latter town to Broughty. The parish is sandy; and it abounds with tumuli, indicative of the visits and conflicts of the northern invaders on this coast. Along the shore there are light-houses, to guide vessels on the entrance into the Tay. Besides Barrie, there is within the parish the thriving village of CARNOUSTIE, where are manufactured, to a considerable extent, coarse linens for houses in Dundee and Arbroath.

PANBRIDE is situate at the mouth of the Frith of Tay. In the northern part of the parish stands the house of Panmure, with its extensive inclosures and plantations; near the house are the vaults and foundations of the old castle of Panmure, long the seat of the earls of that title. The inhabitants of this parish, with the exception of those of the village of MUIRDRUM (who are employed in weaving), are principally engaged in fishing. The parish is watered by a streamlet that runs through a valley called ‘Battie's Den,’ over which is thrown a high bridge, on the turnpike road from Dundee to Arbroath. The coast is flat and rocky, but has two open harbours at the East and West Havens, where small vessels may discharge their cargoes in mild weather. Besides the East and West Havens, there are the villages of Panbride, Skrine, and Muirdrum, at the latter of which is a post-office.

BRECHIN

Is a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, and the capital of the parish of its name; 70 miles N. of Edinburgh, 27 N. N. E. of Dundee, 25 S. W. of Stonehaven, between 12 and 13 N. E. of Forfar, and 8 E. by N. of Montrose; situate at the side of a hill, the foot of which is washed by the South Esk. The town consists of one main street, with several smaller ones diverging; the principal is about a mile in length, extending from the north part to the bridge over the river, an old fabric of two arches: from about the centre of the town another street branches off, stretching in a south-easterly direction for more than half a mile; these two streets extend considerably beyond the royalty into the suburbs called the Upper and Lower Tenements; some of the streets, particularly about the Cross, are very steep. Brechin more than once suffered by the incursions of invaders and the broils of civil war: it was burnt by the Danes in 1012, and in 1645 it was subjected to a similar calamity by the Marquis of Montrose; two years afterwards it was nearly depopulated by that dreadful scourge the plague. Formerly the town was walled; but the gates, the last relics of such kind of protection, have been for a long time removed, and in the present day it exhibits the appearance of a well-built thriving place. The trade carried on consists chiefly of the manufacture of linen goods and the preparation of flax; distilling and stone-quarrying, and a traffic in grain, the produce of the neighbouring country, are among the other branches that conduce to the prosperity of the town. A branch of the British Linen Company's bank, and another of the Dundee Union, are settled here; and there are numerous handsome shops, well stocked with all the various articles necessary for the use and consumption of the inhabitants. The antiquity of Brechin as a royal burgh is of remote date; it is governed by a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, treasurer, hospital master, and five merchant councillors, with two councillors from the six incorporated trades. The burgh joins with Forfar, Montrose, Arbroath, and Inverberrie, in returning a member to parliament. A town court is held every Wednesday, and a justice of peace court holds its sittings on the first Wednesday in every month.

In ancient times an abbey of Culdees existed here; and in 1150, when Brechin was constituted an episcopal see by David I, it is supposed that the site of this establishment was that selected for the foundation of the cathedral. The cathedral church of St. Ninian, which now forms the parish church, stands on the north verge of a precipitous ravine, which separates the burgh lands from those of Brechin castle; it was originally a stately Gothic structure, but its architectural symmetry has been materially injured by the injudicious taste displayed in modern repairs; the length is one hundred and sixteen feet, and the breadth sixty-one; the steeple is a square erection, seventy feet in height, surmounted by a hexagonal spire of fifty feet. The cathedral of Brechin was one of the few places of worship in Scotland in which the service of the liturgy was for some time performed without interruption, after its promulgation in 1637; the bishop was a man of singularly strong and daring character, and ascended the pulpit with a pair of pistols under his gown, determined to carry the behests of royalty into execution at whatever risk. A handsome episcopal chapel, which was erected some few years since, in the Gothic style, is attended by a numerous and highly respectable congregation; of the other places of worship, there are two for the united associate synod, a relief church, one for original seceders, and a chapel of ease. Contiguous to the cathedral stands the tall slender tower of Brechin, which, like its prototype at Abernethy, has puzzled so many antiquaries as to the object of its erection. It is an unadorned turret of freestone, eighty-five feet in height to the cornice, and fifteen feet more to the pinnacle of the modern spire on its top; it has several windows (four in particular, at the top, facing the cardinal points), but, like the tower of Abernethy, has no stair within: the present entrance to the tower is by the church; but there is also a door near the ground on the outside, although it has for many years been built up; the sideways of this door are ornamented with sundry figures in an antique style of carving, and the archway exhibits a rude representation of the crucifixion; the diameter of the tower, at the bottom, is sixteen feet; Mr. Grosse has noticed that the regular course of stones amount exactly to sixty; upon the whole, the proportion gives to the building a look of great elegance. Between the town and the river, and only separated from the former by the ravine before-mentioned, stands Brechin Castle, the ancient seat of the Manles of Panmure, now the property and residence of the Right Hon. Lord Panmure; it is built on a precipitous rock overhanging the stream, and was formerly a fortress, having sustained a siege of twenty days, in 1303, from the English army under Edward I, but Sir Thomas Manle, its proprietor, being killed, it surrendered. The south front, towards the river, presents a confused mass of buildings, consisting of some remains of the original structure, with some more recent erections; the west front is formed with regularity, in the style of the seventeenth century, with round towers at the angles. Till recent years it was considered a great ornament to the town and neighbourhood, but its beauty is much diminished by the destruction of its fine woody avenues and venerable trees. Brechin possesses several excellent public as well as private educational institutions; among the former are the burgh school (erected some years since by subscription), of which the magistrates and heritors are the patrons; the grammar school, and the parochial school. This town has given birth to several individuals of genius and literary distinction, among whom may be enumerated—Maitland, the laborious historian of Edinburgh and London; Dr. Gillies, the historian of Greece; and James Tytler, an eccentric and unfortunate person, well known for his contributions to the first edition of the 'Encyclopædia Britannica.' The market is held on Tuesday; and there are fairs on the first Wednesday of April, the second Wednesday of June, the second Wednesday after the 12th of August, and the first Tuesday after the 21st of November; and, in addition to these, the great and well-attended cattle fair of Trinity Muir is held within a mile of the town.

BROUGHTY-FERRY AND MONIFIETH.

BROUGHTY-FERRY, a considerable modern village, is seated on the Frith of Tay, about four miles east of Dundee, and nearly opposite to Ferry-Port-on-Craig. The place takes its name from the old ruined castle of Broughty, or Burgh-Tay (i. e. 'the defence of the Tay'), situate at its eastern extremity, on a rocky eminence jutting into the water; the only remains of this castle are the fragments of a tower and some vestiges of the battlements. Broughty is divided into two districts, East Ferry and West Ferry—the former of which is in the parish of Monifieth, and the latter in that of Dundee; it is regularly built, and contains several good houses, neatly fitted up for the accommodation of bathers during the summer months, when it is a place of some resort. About fifty years ago, the East Ferry comprised only a few fishermen's huts, built along the beach; but within these twenty or thirty years past it has increased so rapidly that its population now amounts to about 1,800; and as the railway (which is now forming) between Dundee and Arbroath passes through the centre of the village, and a spinning-mill or two is about to be erected, there is every prospect that this number will be speedily augmented to a much greater—more especially as several of the respectable inhabitants of Dundee will, in all likelihood, select this station for summer lodgings when the railway is completed. To the east end of the town are extensive sandy downs, where vast numbers of rabbits burrow;

at the head of the downs, near the village, there is an ice-house for providing and preserving ice for exporters of salmon, in which branch of fishery many persons are here engaged. About half a mile to the north of Broughty-Ferry is Fort-hill, where were lately some remains of the fortifications erected by the English, in 1548, during the reign of Henry VIII, and regency of the Earl of Arran, when they ravaged Dundee and the surrounding country; in 1550 the works on this hill, being surrendered to an allied army of Scots, Germans and French, under M. Des Thermes, were dismantled, and at the present day they present merely shattered relics, the plough having occasionally been driven over a part of the ground which they once covered.

Between twenty and thirty years have elapsed since a place for public worship was erected, in which an independent clergyman officiated for about thirteen years; in the year 1826 a chapel of ease was built by subscription; this structure is now converted into a parish church, and the house first devoted to divine service has been for some years unappropriated to any religious purpose.

The parish of MONIFIETH lies on the shore of the Frith of Tay, extending inland about four miles and a half; the name is understood to be derived from the Gaelic appellation of Monifith, or the 'stag moss.' The village of Monifieth is situate about two miles east from Broughty-Ferry, on a brae with a southern exposure, at no great distance from the sea; it contains an extensive ironfoundry and a church; the latter, though plain in appearance, is a conspicuous edifice, surrounded by a burying-ground, containing a variety of finely carved antique tombstones, executed with a taste rarely seen in the cemetery of a humble village.

CUPAR (OR COUPAR) ANGUS

It is a neat market town, in the parish of its name; 15 miles n.w. of Dundee, and between 12 and 13 E. by N. of Perth; pleasantly situate on the Isla, a few miles above its junction with the Tay, and on the main roads from Dundee to Blairgowrie and from Perth to Forfar: a small stream, tributary to the Isla, divides the town into two parts; that portion which lies on the south of this rivulet is all that belongs to the county of Angus (or Forfar). In ancient times this place was the seat of an abbey of Cistercian monks, founded by Malcolm IV in 1164, and endowed with considerable revenues by that monarch: at the reformation this edifice was destroyed by a mob from Perth; its ruins are sufficient to indicate that it was an establishment of considerable magnitude; the remains occupy part of the site of a Roman camp, said to have been formed by the army of Agricola in his seventh expedition. Cupar is a neatly built little town; the streets are well paved, and a company is formed for lighting them with gas, which is expected to be effected in the ensuing winter. A railway has been opened between this town and that of Dundee, from which great benefit is anticipated to accrue to both places. The manufacture of linen goods is the principal trade, and there are a tannery and a bleachfield. The inhabitants support a reading-room, which is liberally supplied with the London, Scotch, and other newspapers; and a public library, containing an extensive collection of books by ancient and modern authors, is maintained by subscription. There are two branch banking establishments, namely, of the 'Western Bank of Scotland,' and of the 'Perth Banking Company.' The town is governed by a justice of peace and constables; a justices' court is held the first Monday monthly, for the recovery of small debts.

The church, which stands on the Angus side, is a neat building, with a steeple detached from it which comprises the town-house and the gaol; besides the parish church, there is one episcopal chapel and two dissenting meeting houses. The parish of Cupar Angus extends five miles along the east bank of the river Isla, varying from one to two miles in breadth; the surface, arable and meadow land, is well cultivated and enclosed. Within the limits of the parish are the villages of Balbrogy, Coldham, and Kethick; the first-named in the northern part of the district, the two latter in the southern. The market, which is chiefly for cattle, is held on Thursday; and the fairs on the second Wednesdays in March and April, the Tuesday next before Whit-Sunday, the first Thursday after Whit-Sunday, the first Wednesday in July, the first Thursday after Martinmas, and the Thursday before Christmas-day—all o. s. except March and April fairs.

DUNDEE

Is an important royal burgh and sea-port, ranging along the north bank of the Firth of Tay, about twelve miles from its mouth; it is 43 miles N. of Edinburgh, 66 S.W. of Aberdeen, 29 S.W. of Montrose, 23 E. by N. of Perth, 17 S.W. of Arbroath, and 14 S. of Forfar. The situation of this busy port is very beautiful: the noble river here forms a bay two miles broad, from the margin of which the town spreads itself over a gradual acclivity rising from the base of a lofty and sheltering eminence, called 'Dundee Law,' the picturesque coast of Fishery forms the southern border of the Tay, and a steam ferry-boat effects an hourly communication between the opposite shores of the estuary.

The earliest authentic accounts of Dundee do not satisfy the inquirer as to the origin either of its name or its existence; tradition ascribes the latter to a vow of David Earl of Huntingdon, in the latter part of the twelfth century, which caused a church to be erected on the site occupied by the present venerable edifice, in the Nethergate, to testify his gratitude for a signal deliverance from the perils of the sea. Be this as it may, the town was of sufficient consequence during the gross usurpation of Edward I to be made the station of an English garrison; and in the course of the fierce struggle for the Scottish crown between that prince (nominally on behalf of Baliol) and Robert Bruce, Dundee was taken and retaken twice; in these operations the patriot Wallace took a conspicuous part; here, impelled to retaliate the atrocities of Edward's officers, he put to death the son of the English governor. The castle of Dundee becoming so formidable an annoyance when in possession of an enemy, an occurrence but too frequent, Bruce deemed it expedient to demolish it, and not a vestige of it now remains; its site was that of the present Castle-street. The town was destroyed in the reign of Richard II of England, and it suffered a similar infliction when Edward VI sat upon the English throne; but on each occasion it arose from its ashes, and resumed its rank among the principal Scottish towns—several times being pledged as a security for ransoms, and for the fulfilment of treaties. The oldest charter Dundee can boast of is one granted by Robert Bruce, recognizing the burghal privileges conferred by William the Lion, brother to the Earl of Huntingdon mentioned above. In this place the reformed religion found some of its earliest and warmest defenders; so zealous was the town in its cause, as to be honoured with the appellation of 'the second Geneva;' in 1544 the prophetic victim of Cardinal Beaton's ferocity, George Wishart, preached here; and in 1559 the provost, attended by a multitude of his townsmen, hastened to Edinburgh to assist in the siege of Leith, then in possession of the French. In April, 1645, the notorious Duke of Montrose took Dundee by assault; it is affirmed that, during the pillage and slaughter which ensued, Montrose ascended to the top of the 'Law,' in order that his revenge might be satiated by witnessing the carnage that was being perpetrated below. The last calamity that befel this town was its capture and plunder by Gen. Monk, soon after the battle of Worcester had placed Scotland within the gripe of the victorious Cromwell; but, as this dismal catastrophe is noticed hereafter, we shall close this brief narrative with the enumeration of a few eminent names that have conferred honour on Dundee, from its being the place either of their birth or education:—Sir William Wallace, the uncompromising patriot and heroic soldier; John Blair, Gold- man and Ferguson, the poets; Sir George Mackenzie, the scholar and lawyer; and, in more recent days, Drs. Small, Willison, Davidson and Smith, each distinguished for literary talent and profound learning—and the intrepid naval victor, Admiral Duncan.

COMMERCE AND MANUFACTURES.

The stranger, approaching Dundee by the Newport ferry, is soon made aware of its commercial character by its fine harbour and extensive docks, crowded with shipping, and its noble quay; on the other hand, the volumes of smoke, issuing from a forest of towering chimnies, render it equally apparent that Dundee is likewise a great manufacturing town. The rapid increase, both of its productions and shipping, is indeed amazing; the generation has not yet passed away that beheld but few vessels in its harbour besides fishing boats and smuggling craft. When the memorable sacking of Dundee was perpetrated by Monk, in 1651, sixty vessels were found in the harbour, so richly laden as to afford a booty to the captors exceeding in value the whole of their spoil 'in the wars throughout the three nations;' but this ill-gotten plunder was no sooner obtained than lost, for the ships sunk in passing the bar; so that, although those inhabitants who had deposited their valuables on board were ruined, their plunderers engaged in it; but at length it declined, and finally died away, in favour of Glasgow. The manufacture of woollen cloths was next attempted to be established, but met with no success. Out of these failures arose a spirit for manufacturing goods from flax; and, as an encouragement to this branch, in its infancy, a bounty was given, by government, on all linen exported, and a heavy duty laid on the importation of foreign linens. By these enactments the trade of Dundee increased to a great extent, and has kept pace with that of its shipping. In 1745, the amount of flax imported was 74 tons; in 1791, 2,444 tons, and hemp 299 tons; in 1835, the imports were, flax 9,939, hemp 6,213, flax codilla 5,330, hemp codilla 1,192 tons; and in 1836, flax 28,701, hemp 1,958, flax codilla 7,873, and hemp codilla 1,931 tons. The exports of linens, in 1835, were 618,707 pieces; and, in 1836, 710,944 pieces. Twenty-five years ago, there were only four steam spinning mills; there are now upwards of forty. The various productions from flax and hemp form the staple of the town: the raw material is imported chiefly from Russia, Prussia and Holland; this is spun by steam-power into thread, which, after being bleached, is woven into Osnaburghs, sheetings, baggins, sailcloth, sacking and dowlas. A century ago the population did not amount to 5,000; it now amounts, probably, to 60,000. The wages of flax-dressers is about twelve shillings per week, of weavers ten shillings, and of girls nine shillings, varying with circumstances; the labour is light, and the hours of its exertion from half-past five in the morning till seven in the evening, with the customary intervals for meals. The manufacture of machinery, steam-boilers, chain-cables and anchors, is carried on extensively; and ship-building is in great activity.

DESCRIPTIVE SKETCH OF DUNDEE.

Although Dundee is not conspicuous for beauty, and has not enlarged its dimensions in proportion to its increased population, it contains several handsome streets. The greater part of the mansions of the opulent are ranged on the lofty bank of the Tay, westward of the town: this situation commands a view of the majestic river, and the beautiful scenery on the opposite coast. Near the termination of this range of handsome dwellings is the newly-erected mansion of the dean of guild, which is a sumptuous edifice. The central point of the town is a wide oblong area, called High-street, on the south side of which stands the town-house, comprising the guildhall, the court-room, and appropriate offices, together with repositories for the town records; the upper part has hitherto been the town prison, but the new gaol will supersede this inadequate and discreditable receptacle. The town-house was finished in 1734, from a plan of the elder Adams; the front is very handsome, beneath which is a piazza; and from the centre of the building rises a lofty spire, 140 feet high. The trades'-hall ornaments the eastern end of High-street; besides the apartments in which the nine incorporated trades hold their meetings, there is a large public reading-room within its arrangements. Castle-street (the site of the ancient castle), which runs from High-street towards the quay, contains an episcopal chapel and the theatre. The new but unfinished Reform-street diverges from High-street in a northern direction, and is composed of very newly-constructed houses and shops. Looking up this street, the elegant edifice called the 'Seminaries,' with its chaste Doric portico, forms a graceful terminating object: this tasteful structure was completed in 1834, at a cost of £10,000; it comprehends the burgh grammar-school, and an academy, patronized by the corporation, designed to impart a liberal education to the pupils, including instructions in literature, science, and the ancient and modern languages. Exclusive of this educational establishment, the town maintains numerous other schools, including a large one in Taysquare, a sessional school, and several infants' schools. The principal church of Dundee rears its huge and lofty tower westward of High-street; it is 156 feet high. This venerable and capacious edifice is cruciform, and comprehends four distinct parochial churches, in each of which service is performed; it is partly composed of the remains of the original church, founded by the Earl of Huntingdon; and this remnant of former days is associated with many traditionary tales.

It is satisfactory to find that the revenue from shore dues between May, 1835 and May, 1836 amounted to £12,765. 8s. 2d., being an excess over the preceding year of £1,846; and each of the other sources of revenue has also increased considerably: part of the income is appropriated to a sinking fund for the liquidation of the debt. The number of vessels which entered the harbour in 1835 was 3,981—their tonnage 259,736; the number in 1836, 4,214—tonnage 293,119: of the amount of tonnage in 1836, viz. 293,119, 180,088 belonged to the port of Dundee, comprising 28,751 foreign, 130,946 coasting, and 20,391 in the river Tay trade. The whale fishery employs many ships from this port, though it is not carried on to the extent it was a few years since; but steam navigation is successfully conducted by several enterprising companies: the steam-ships between Dundee, London and Hull have attained a high character for swiftness; the passage between Dundee and London is frequently made in forty hours; this facility has induced many an inhabitant of 'bonnie Dundee' to compliment the metropolis of England with a visit, before he has paid the same respect to the capital of his own country, though comparatively so near to him. The earliest articles manufactured in the town seem to have been soap and glass, which engaged a great number of hands; and the brewing of ale was carried on to some extent. The business of building ships appears likewise to have flourished here at an early period, and such an occupation soon led to the manufacture of cordage, which remains still a branch of commerce. The manufacture of cotton was once tried here, and had the appearance of forming an important branch in the

At the foot of the church tower, on its western side, is placed the ancient market cross, recently removed from High-street; it is a carved pillar, supporting an unicorn, who holds an armorial shield between his knees. There are several other churches in connexion with the establishment (one of which, lately erected on the Perth road, is very tasteful), and numerous places of worship occupied by the different secession congregations, by Scottish episcopalians, and by the various denominations of dissenters, comprising independents, baptists, methodists and unitarians; several of these are highly ornamental. There is also an elegant chapel for the Roman Catholics, who are numerous in consequence of the great influx of natives of Ireland resident in Dundee. The independent chapel in Constitution-road is a truly pleasing structure: the front is in the Gothic style; the interior is in correspondence, having a nave, and side-aisles and galleries, accommodating 1,200 persons. Adjoining the fine church of St. Andrew is a meeting-house for the 'Glassites'—a section of the religious world founded by Mr. John Glass, who, it appears, was made a freeman of Dundee by the town-council, in 1753. Besides the burial-grounds attached to several of the religious edifices, there is a large cemetery to the north of the town, termed the 'Howff,' the inspection of which cannot fail to be interesting to a stranger: it is kept with commendable care, and abounds with varied sepulchral sculpture; many of the monuments exhibit, by their decay as well as by their inscriptions, the testimonies of great age. The average number of interments here, in ordinary times, is seven per diem; but during the prevalence of the influenza, at the close of 1836 and beginning of 1837, the number fearfully increased; for some time the mortality in Dundee was about one hundred and fifty weekly, and during one week two hundred victims were mortally smitten by the pestilence. The various places of sepulture proving inadequate to the increased population, a new cemetery, of extensive dimensions, is preparing to the east of the new gaol; and the tasteful judgment evinced in its plan leaves no doubt but that this interesting inclosure will be becomingly adapted for the repose of the dead and the meditation of the living. Not far from this cemetery is the depot of the Dundee and Newtyle railway, completed about ten years since; the line is eleven miles; there are three inclined planes, and the 'Law' is penetrated by a tunnel 340 yards in length; the cost was upwards of £50,000; the carriages are propelled by steam, and convey both passengers and goods. This line of transit will forthwith be extended to Cupar Angus, and ultimately continued to Blairgowrie. A similar undertaking is in progress between Dundee and Arbroath, and one to Perth is in contemplation. On passing through the arch over which the railway inclined plane is carried, you arrive at the entrance to Dudhope Castle, now converted into a barrack, but originally the seat of the Scrymgeour family, standard-bearers to the Scottish kings, one of whom, after the restoration, was elevated to the peerage, by the title of Earl of Dundee; this mansion subsequently became the property of the reckless persecutor of the presbyterians, Graham of Claverhouse, Viscount of Dundee. From the approach to this ancient mansion is a fine view of the new gaol, the plan of which will admit of the classification of offenders, an arrangement of admitted paramount importance in prison discipline; the completion of this well-adapted public structure will remove the reproach which the former place of confinement, at the town-house, has long attached to Dundee. To the northward of this prison is the new bleaching-green, occupying nearly five acres, which, when the walks and the shrubbery are completed, will constitute an agreeable promenade, in addition to its ostensible useful purpose.

In conjunction with the prominent buildings already mentioned, the Royal Infirmary, in King-street, should be particularized; it was opened in 1798, and has communicated all those blessings for which these benign institutions are designed. Not far distant from this house of mercy, at the east end of Cowgate, is the only fragment remaining of the ancient town-wall; it is an arch which bestrides the street, and is, perhaps, indebted for its continuance to a feeling of grateful veneration for the memory of the amiable martyr, George Wishart, who from this gate, during the plague in 1544, preached to the infected, assembled on the outer side, and to the healthy on the inner; his text was, Psalm 107, verse 20, 'The Lord sent his word and healed them.' The 'Royal Lunatic Asylum,' in the Forfar road, both for elegance and accommodation, will not suffer from a comparison with any kindred institution in Scotland. The 'Royal Orphan Asylum,' founded in 1815, is an admirable charity; and so are many others which are enumerated at the end of the directory. At the western termination of the fine terrace, called Dock-street, overlooking the docks and harbour, is an elegant building, in the Grecian style, named the 'Exchange Coffee-rooms;' it was erected at an expense of £9,000, and contains spacious coffee and reading rooms, besides apartments for the transaction of mercantile business; access to these rooms is liberally permitted to every respectable stranger. Westward of this edifice is the fishmarket, amply supplied with the various species of the finny tribes in season; the Dundee haddock is a peculiar favourite. From this locality, Union-street forms a communication with the Nethergate; it contains excellent shops, and 'Thistle Hall,' much used for public meetings. The various banking establishments occupy buildings which likewise contribute to the embellishment of the town, as well as to the facilities of its trade. Three newspapers issue weekly from the press of Dundee, and maintain an increasing circulation: the 'Dundee, Perth and Cupar Advertiser,' established in 1800, and is published on Friday; the 'Dundee Courier,' established in 1816, the day of publication Tuesday; and the 'Dundee Chronicle,' of more recent date, is published on Saturday.

THE MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT of Dundee is exercised by a provost, four bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and fifteen councillors. There are six courts held within the town—the burgh or bailie court, the sheriff's court, the commissary court, the guild court, the police court, and the justice of the peace small debt court. The town is divided into three districts, and subdivided into eleven wards, for the convenience of the registration of the burgh electors. Dundee sends a representative to parliament; the present member is the Right Hon. Sir Henry Parnell, paymaster of the forces and treasurer of the navy. The town is illuminated with gas; and it is satisfactory to learn that the town-council are occupied in determining upon the most eligible mode of supplying it plentifully with water, hitherto a desideratum. The gas-works are situate at 'Peep o' Day,' and are the most extensive in the county. The principal market days are Tuesday and Friday; and there are two fairs, namely, the 26th of August and the 19th of September.

DUNNICHEN AND LETHEM.

DUNNICHEN parish extends four miles in length, having Forfar on the north-west, Inverailly on the south-west, Rescobie on the north, and Kirken on the east. The land, which is nearly all arable, is productive, and has been much improved by the use of marl, of which there is abundance in this district. The principal village is LETHEM, situate in the north-east portion of the parish, five miles from Forfar: it is a modern little place, having been erected some years ago on the estate of Mr. Dempster; and thrives by the manufacture of considerable quantities of linen cloth, and by the preparation and spinning of flax—branches of industry which supply employment to a great proportion of the inhabitants. There is a church of the establishment, and a chapel of ease for independents, at Dunnichen; and a parochial school at Lethem.

FORFAR

Is a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, the county town, and the capital of the parish of its name; 57 miles N. of Edinburgh, 15 E. of Arbroath, 14 N. of Dundee, 13 S. W. of Brechin, and 5 E. by N. of Glamis; situate in the lowest part of a country sloping towards it on all sides. It is a town now of pleasant appearance, though strict regularity has by no means been observed in the formation of the streets, which contain many well-built houses and handsome shops; the latter, with the principal thoroughfares, are lighted with gas. The burgh, within the last twelve or thirteen years, has been ornamented with a handsome suite of county buildings, situate in Castle-street, and erected at the general expense of the shire. The town-house, which was rebuilt previously, besides the requisite offices, contains a spacious upper room for public meetings and amusements. The inhabitants support an excellently conducted news-room and library, the latter comprising upwards of three thousand volumes. The original charters which constituted Forfar a royal burgh are lost; but the privileges were confirmed in 1669, in virtue of which the burgh is governed by a provost, two bailies, and nineteen councillors, annually elected. A sheriff's court is held for the trial of civil and criminal cases generally; also a burgh court, for the determination of local civil and police affairs. The police department is confided to constables, who serve the office for six months. The revenue of the burgh, arising from lands, customs, &c., may be averaged at about £1,000 per annum; it unites with Montrose, Brechin, Arbroath, and Inverberrie, in returning a member to parliament. The chief trade of this town, and of its vicinity, is the weaving of Osnaburgs and other coarse linens; the manufacture of brogues has existed here from time immemorial, and still gives employment to a number of hands; there are several breweries, and these, with the tanning and currying of leather, comprise the other principal establishments of business. There are three superior inns, and as many banking houses; the latter are branches of the 'Dundee New Bank,' of the 'Dundee Union Bank,' and of the 'Arbroath Bank.'

The places of worship are the parish church of the national establishment; St. James's chapel of ease, an edifice of modern erection; an episcopalian chapel, opened in 1823; an united secession and an independent chapel. The Forfar academy, an excellent institution, commenced its instructive course in 1815; this course comprises English grammar, arithmetic, geography, mathematics, Latin and other languages. Exclusive of the parochial school, there is one for infants, a boarding-school for young ladies, and several day-schools. On the west side of the town is a fine loch, about a mile in length by half a mile in breadth; it is a beautiful sheet of water, abounding with fish. Upon a small artificial island, near the north end of the loch, anciently stood a nunnery, founded by Queen Margaret as a separate establishment from her husband Malcolm: at the partial drainage of the lake, about seventy years since, for the purpose of obtaining its fertilizing marl, some weapons and instruments were found at the bottom; these were conjectured to have been the implements used by the murderers of Malcolm II, at Glamis, on the ground of a tradition which asserts that the assassins, in attempting to cross the lake upon the ice, went down and perished. The date of the erection of Forfar castle, which stood upon an eminence to the north of the town, cannot be certified; but it is said to have been the place of meeting of the first parliament convened by King Malcolm Canmore, and his occasional seat of residence after the recovery of his throne from Macbeth. The magistrates of the burgh some years since removed the market cross from the street to the site of the old castle, to mark the spot where the monarch sojourned, as but few remains of the edifice are now extant; these, which consist of some fragments of the walls, are visible on the west side of the hill. The 'Picture of Scotland,' and the 'Gazetteer,' as well, furnish many interesting accounts of Forfar, and some amusing traditional anecdotes connected with the town, which we are compelled most reluctantly to exclude from our pages. The Rev. John Bruce, the intelligent author of the 'Statistical Account of the Parish of Forfar,' furnishes a number of particulars illustrative of the rise of the town, its tastes, and appearances. He says that about the middle of the last century there were not above seven tea-kettles, seven pairs of bellows, and as many watches in Forfar; now (in 1793), he adds, every house in the town has a tea-kettle and bellows, and every menial servant must have his watch. At the same not distant period an ox, valued at forty shillings, supplied the flesh market of Forfar for a fortnight. The steady advancement of population, trade, and agricultural improvements, both before and since 1793, when this gentleman wrote, have in this district, as elsewhere, revolutionized the prices and consumption of articles, and now Forfar is one of the most thriving and comfortable towns in the county. The market is held on Saturday; and the fairs on the last Wednesday in January, the first Wednesday in May (old style), June 26th, the first Tuesdays in July and August, the last Wednesday in September, October 29th, and the first Wednesday in November.

FRIOCKHEIM, ARBIRLOT, CARMYLIE, GUTHRIE,

INVERKEILOR, KINNEL, KIRKDEN, LUNAN and MARYTOUN.

FRIOCKHEIM is a modern village, six miles from Arbroath (which is the post town), situate on the right bank of the Lunan. It owes its origin to Mr. Andson, who laid out the ground on a regular plan, and feued it into small lots, in order to encourage the settlement of weavers, &c.; and by far the greater proportion of the inhabitants are employed by this gentleman in the spinning of flax and weaving of linen cloth:—the spinning mill, and the buildings connected with Mr. A.'s works, are lighted with gas. Altogether the situation of this place is peculiarly eligible for the seat of manufactures, being nearly equi-distant from most of the towns in the county, and in the immediate vicinity of the Arbroath and Forfar railway. In 1835 upwards of £700, was collected by public subscription, and the proceeds applied to the erection of a handsome chapel, in connexion with the established church, and the place is now formed into a regular parish. In the village is a good school, which is attended by about eighty pupils, who are taught the ordinary branches of education; and teachers of music and dancing visit the village at certain periods. There is no municipal government, the hitherto exemplary conduct and contented habits of the inhabitants rendering such description of superintendence unnecessary. The population has nearly doubled itself within the last six years: at this period (1837,) it amounts to about six hundred persons.

ARBIRLOT parish is contiguous to that of St. Vigean's at Arbroath, on the north, and bounded on the southeast by the German ocean, extending four miles in length by three in breadth. The village stands on the east bank of the Elliot stream, from whence the name is derived, which was formerly Aber-elliot. Along the sea-coast the land is sandy; inland the soil is a rich loam, capable of producing various crops.

CARMYLIE is four miles in length by three in breadth.
 The parish is hilly, and contains much land that is unproductive; but there are considerable quarries, from which good pavement stones are obtained, and exported in great quantities. The small river Elliot runs through the whole length of the parish.

GUTHRIE parish is divided into two parts, lying nearly six miles asunder from each other. The land slopes from the hill of Guthrie to the south and southeast, a part only being arable. Prior to the Reformation this parish had a collegiate church, with a provost and three prebendaries. The patronage of the parish belongs to the family of Guthrie, one of whom was slain at the battle of Flodden.

GLAMMIS

Is an inconsiderable village, 13 miles n. of Dundee, 12 n.e. of Cupar Angus, 5 s.w. of Forfar, and the like distance s. of Kirriemuir; situate in the rich and fertile parish of its name, in the vale of Strathmore, which is watered by the river Dean. The only object of interest in this district is Glammis Castle, which stands in a park near the village. This is an edifice of princely and antique appearance, consisting of an irregular congregation of tall towers, some of which are of remoter date than others. It was anciently a royal residence, and the scene of the death of Malcolm II, in 1034: it afterwards became the property of Macbeth, after whose death it fell to the crown. Robert II gave it to John Lyon, his favourite, who, on marrying the king's second daughter, became the founder of the present noble family of Strathmore; and the eldest son of the earl bears the title of Lord Glammis. On the conviction and execution of the young and beautiful Lady Glammis for witchcraft, in 1537, the castle once more became royal property, and was a residence of James V, but it was afterwards restored to the family. It contains an extensive and valuable museum of curiosities, old armour, and a collection of pictures. Near the castle stands a remarkable curiosity, namely, a great number of dials, thus disposed,—on a pedestal stand the figures of four lions rampant, twice as large as life, each holding a dial in their fore paws, facing the four cardinal points: from their heads rises a huge mass of stone, something like a pine-apple in shape, with the protuberances upon it formed into dials, making the number of these ancient time-pieces probably not less than one hundred. The castle, with its museum, pedestal, &c. forms the chief attraction to tourists in the county of Forfar, and is well worthy of minute inspection. The inhabitants of Glammis are principally employed in the weaving of linen fabrics. Two societies are established here, namely, the Gardeners' and the Freemasons', who hold their meetings in a neat building erected for the purpose, which is also used for other meetings when required. Fairs are held on the first Wednesday in May and the first Wednesday after the 22nd of November, both new style, and also on the Wednesday after Whitsunday, old style.

KIRRIEMUIR

Is a large town, one of considerable antiquity, a burgh of barony, and capital of the parish of its name; 62 miles n. of Edinburgh, 18 n. of Dundee, 5 n.w. of Forfar, and the like distance n. of Glammis; situate near the foot of the braes of Angus, on the south-west side of a hill, along the northern brow of a beautiful glen, through which flows the small river Gairie. The prospect from the lower part of the town is bounded by the southern braes of the glen, but from the higher part almost the whole of the delightful vale of Strathmore is brought into view. The town consists of several streets, diverging from each other—fancifully described as resembling the shaft and arms of an anchor; its appearance has been much improved of late years, and the streets are now lighted with gas. For a long period Kirriemuir has been the thriving seat of considerable manufactures, comprising Osnaburgs, coarse brown sheetings, and white dowlas; it is celebrated for the excellent fabric of its cloth, and the ingenuity and industry of those employed in producing it; some idea may be formed of the importance of this trade from the fact that the looms of Kirriemuir have furnished, in one year, upwards of twenty-five thousand pieces of cloth, consisting of one hundred and forty-six yards each. The inhabitants are not more notable for their ingenious and persevering industry, than for their intelligence and general knowledge: they support an excellent news-room, well supplied with London and provincial papers; and there is a library, chiefly composed of religious books and tracts, belonging to the Sunday-school, in which latter valuable institution several hundred children are educated. The date of the barony of Kirriemuir is unknown, and it is only certain that the jurisdiction of its baillie once extended over a large tract of country; Lord Douglas, who is the superior of the burgh, appoints the baillie; a body of constables is chosen annually, who constitute a police, at the head of which is a moderator. A court of requests, for the recovery of small debts, is held in the town, on the first Friday of each month, for a district comprehending eight parishes.

palian chapel, a relief church, and united secession and original seceders' chapels; the architecture of the church, which is very much admired, is ornamented with a neat spire and clock. Besides the infants' school, there are bursary and parochial schools, and several private seminaries. Three miles to the north-east, within the boundary of the parish, overlooking the small river Carity, stands the castle of Invercarity, a large Gothic edifice, in a state of good preservation; and two miles west are the ruins of Castle Balfour, erected by Cardinal Beaton. The surface of the parish is much diversified: to the east and west of the town it is almost level; but the greater proportion of the district is beautifully varied with hills and dales, rivers, woods, and arable fields—some parts embellished with thriving plantations; and it is intersected by roads in all directions. The weekly market is held on Friday; and there are four annual fairs, viz., the first Friday after Good Friday, the second Wednesday after the 26th of May, the 24th of July or Wednesday after; the 19th of October or Wednesday after, and the second Tuesday after Martinmas.

POST OFFICE, Glengate-street, James Dickson, Post Master.—Letters from DUNDEE arrive (by mail gig) every morning at seven in summer and eight in winter, and are despatched every afternoon at four.

MONTROSE

AND NEIGHBOURHOOD, WITH THE PARISHES OF CRAIG AND DUN.

MONTROSE is a royal burgh and sea-port, and the capital of the parish of its name; 72 miles N. E. of Edinburgh, 29 N.E. of Dundee, 23 s.w. of Stonehaven, 21 E. by N. of Forfar, 13 s. s. w. of Inverberrie, 12 s. of Arbroath, and 8 E. of Brechin; agreeably situate on a level sandy peninsula, formed by the German ocean, the rivers North and South Esk, and a large expanse of water designated the 'basin.' It was anciently called Celurea: but the derivation of its modern appellation, Montrose, has been a subject fruitful in controversy with etymologists: Camden derives the name from the Latin Mons Rosarum, the 'Mount of Roses,' which is countenanced by the seal of the town bearing the ornament of roses, with the motto Mare ditat, Rosa decorat—'the sea enriches, and the rose adorns.'

Montrose is connected with many important events in Scottish history; it is mentioned as the port from which Sir James Douglas embarked in 1330, with a numerous and splendid retinue, on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, carrying along with him the heart of Robert Bruce; it is distinguished as the first place in Scotland where the Greek language was taught, and as having sent forth from its seminary the celebrated scholar Andrew Melville; it was the birth-place of the warlike Marquess of Montrose, and the house in which he was born was occupied as an inn not many years ago. Montrose bestows the title of duke upon the chief of the family of Graham. This was the first port made by the French fleet, in December, 1715, with the Chevalier on board; and that prince embarked at the same

The town of Montrose is neatly built, consisting of a fine spacious main street, with others diverging from it; and is justly accounted one of the first provincial towns for its size in Scotland, perhaps in Britain. The streets and principal shops are lighted with gas; the houses, if not elegant, are, on the whole, well built and regular, though a few have their gables towards the street. About the centre of the main street is the town-house, a neat plain building of two stories, with an arcade below. The South Esk is crossed by a magnificent suspension bridge, on the precise site of the former wooden one; the foundation stone of the masonry was laid in September, 1828, and the bridge declared open in December, 1829; it was designed by Captain Brown, R.N., patentee, and finished at an expense of upwards of £20,000; it stretches across the river in a noble span—the distance between the points of suspension being four hundred and thirty-two feet, and together with its approaches the structure extends eight hundred feet; it forms a roadway of twenty-six feet in breadth, having a footpath railed off: this edifice is a great ornament to the town, more particularly to the new street, which commences at the northern end of the bridge, and leads nearly to the heart of the town. The river at the bridge is very deep, having thirty-five feet water at spring tides, and twenty feet at low water in ordinary tides; and so rapid that during ebb it frequently runs at the rate of six miles an hour. The harbour is formed by the river and an arm of the sea—is very commodious, and a safe asylum for vessels in tempestuous weather. Two light-houses have been erected at a very great expense; they are a most valuable improvement, as they enable ships to enter the port in the darkest nights: a larger house, in which the keeper of the lights resides, is provided with accommodation for the reception and recovery of persons who have suffered shipwreck; and attached to this praiseworthy establishment is a life-boat. It is in contemplation to construct an extensive wet dock in that part of the Links adjoining the river, and to supersede the traffic with London by snacks by a large steamer of three hundred horses' power. The quays in the harbour are very judiciously planned, and built in a most substantial manner. The port possesses a custom-house, which comprehends within its bounds the coast from the lights of Tay on the south to Bervie-brow, or the Tod-head, on the north. The shipping trade of Montrose is chiefly confined to the Baltic and coasting branches, except a few large vessels which are employed in the whale fishery; the exportation of cured salmon and cod is considerable; but the most important portion of the export trade is corn, in which it is supposed to exceed any port in Scotland. The tonnage employed amounts to about 11,050; the number of vessels to 105, exclusive of the shipping belonging to the creeks or out-ports annexed to the custom-house. The principal manufactures of Montrose comprise linen yarns, sheetings, and sailcloth, which are carried on extensively; but there are various other branches of trading industry of considerable importance, among which may be enumerated several breweries, ship-building and tan-yards, rope-walks, an ironfoundry, a starch manufactory, &c.; there is also a good business in coal. The commerce of the place is assisted by three branch banks, namely, of the 'Bank of Scotland,' of the 'British Linen Company,' and of the 'Dundee Union'; there are no fewer than twenty agencies of fire, life, and annuity insurance, besides others for effecting marine insurances. The principal inns are the 'White Horse,' in Murray-street, and the 'Star,' in High-street. The Downs, or Links, are situate between the town and the sea, and are the most extensive of any in Scotland, comprehending a circuit of four miles, finely formed by nature for the favourite and healthful Scots' game of golf, which is here greatly practised. Montrose has its theatre, assemblies, and other places of amusement; and numerous institutions, charitable, educational, scientific and social. A well-conducted weekly newspaper, under the title of the 'Montrose, Arbroath and Brechin Review,' was established in 1811, and is published every Friday morning; a public library was instituted in 1785; a reading society in 1819, a session sabbath school library in 1822, and a savings' bank in 1815: there is likewise a mechanics' scientific and literary institution, where lectures are regularly delivered; and a natural history and antiquarian society, to which latter is attached a museum. A commercial news-room, and the Exchange coffee-room (the latter conducted by a body of managers), also afford mental relaxation to the polished commercial community of the town. The erection of Montrose into a royal burgh has generally been referred to the year 1352, in the reign of David II; but there is good reason for believing that the first charter emanated from David I. The municipal government is vested in a town-council, consisting of nineteen persons, including a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, and a treasurer, and the master of the hospital; of which nineteen, fifteen must be resident guild brethren, and four resident craftsmen, including the convener for the time. The town is protected by a body of police, under the superintendence of a committee elected by the annual head-court, in which the magistracy are included. A justice of peace small debt court is held in the town-hall on the first Monday of every month, and a burgh or baillie court sits every Tuesday forenoon in the court-room. The burgh is united with those of Forfar, Brechin, Arbroath, and Inverberrie, in returning a representative to parliament.

The parish church is a large building, elegantly finished, measuring 98 feet long by 65 over walls; but it is surrounded with houses, which prevent its being seen to advantage. The episcopal chapel, situate in the Links, is a neat edifice, with a fine organ; and the new church of St. John is a truly handsome structure. The other places of worship are mentioned under the appropriate head, at page 464. The public charities of Montrose are very numerous, and evidence the philanthropic feelings of the inhabitants: among these are the Ancient Hospital of Montrose, under the guardianship of the town; and the Royal Lunatic Asylum, Infirmary and Dispensary, incorporated by royal charter in 1810. There are many funds applicable to the relief of the poor and indigent sick, and societies for the same benevolent purposes; several religious associations, comprising bible, missionary and tract societies; and a considerable number of educational establishments, of the most efficient character, both free and private. The academy, situate on the Links, is a handsome erection, surmounted by a neat dome; the establishment comprises a rector, and six or seven teachers in the various branches of mathematics, the Greek, Latin, and modern languages, writing and arithmetic, English grammar, drawing, &c. On the whole, such a number of valuable institutions is rarely if ever to be met with in a town of the size of Montrose; and the circumstance may well be accepted as proving that it is the residence of many families of high respectability and wealth, and the seat of a very intelligent and industrious population. The market is held on Friday; and two great hiring fairs take place annually, viz., on the Fridays next after Whit-Sunday and Martinmas, old style.

CRAIG parish occupies the peninsular corner of land between the sea and the basin of Montrose. The islet called Inch Brioch, in the neck of water connecting the basin with the sea, belongs to the parish; and there are also within its limits the two small fishing villages of USAN and FERRYDEN. The land is generally arable, and beneath the surface nature has deposited abundance of limestone.

The parish of DUN LIES between Montrose and Brechin, on the north bank of the South Esk; the land is generally fertile, and the surface for the most part level. Within the parish is a small lake, called DUN'S DISH.

NEWTYLE

Is a village, in the parish of its name, situate on the road from Dundee to Meikle (in Perthshire), eleven miles north-east of the former town, and two and a half north of the latter. This is an improving little place, and promises at no very distant period to arrive at some importance, as great advantages are anticipated to accrue to it from being seated on the lines of railway opened between Dundee and Cupar-Angus.
The neighbourhood also presents inducements to manufacturers from Dundee and other towns to establish works in this district, land being comparatively cheap and wages low; the locality of Newtyle is likewise considered most eligible as a depot for grain and other agricultural produce. The inhabitants of the village are almost exclusively occupied in weaving; the articles produced from the loom are chiefly sheetings.

The parish, which is situate in the south-west part of the county, extends two miles in length by one and three quarters in breadth, including a portion of the Sidlaw hills, from which the lands decline into the rich flat exposure of Strathmore. Near the village are the remains of the castle of Hatton, built by Lawrence Lord Oliphant, in the year 1575; and contiguous to these ruins some vestiges are visible of the still more ancient castle of Balcraig, concerning the erection or founder of which even tradition is silent.

HADDINGTONSHIRE,

OR EAST LOTHIAN, lies in the south-eastern part of Scotland; bounded on the north by the Frith of Forth, on the east by that strait and also by the North Sea, on the south by Berwickshire, and on the west by Edinburghshire, or Mid Lothian: from east to west it extends twenty-five miles; from north to south, at the middle, sixteen—at the east end it is not more than ten miles across, and at the west end about twelve: its surface presents an area of about two hundred and eighty square miles. The early history of this county is so intimately connected with that of Edinburgh as to render unnecessary a lengthened recurrence to this subject. The Saxons denominated the whole country, lying along the sea and the forth, Lothian; afterwards it was divided into three parts, called, from their relative situation to each other, East Lothian, Mid Lothian, and West Lothian. In 1020 this district with other parts of the Lothians, was ceded to Malcolm II. In succeeding centuries the shire suffered the horrors of pillage and conflagration, on all occasions of the armies of England being sent to invade the country, or to molest or punish the capital. In 1296, and again, in 1650 the sanguinary battles of Dunbar were fought within the county; and in the critical year of 1745 it was the scene of the conflict at Prestonpans—since which period it has enjoyed almost uninterrupted repose and tranquillity.

SOIL, PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, &c.—In point of soil, cultivation and produce, this county holds the first rank in Scotland; and in some of these respects, particularly the mode of husbandry, it will bear a comparison with the most favoured districts of England. In an agricultural point of view, the county may be divided into four districts. The first is a sloping tract of land, with a fertile soil. The second is a ride of ground north of the Tyne, descending partly towards that river, and partly towards the coast-land; it comprehends a great proportion of the arable land of the county. The third consists of a tract varying in breadth, elevated above the midlands, and continuing along the base of the mountains nearly the whole extent of the county. The fourth comprises an extensive range of mountains, which commences at the south-west extremity of the shire, and terminates in a high promontory called St. Abb's Head; the greater part of this is moor, but some spots between the hills are kept under a regular rotation of crops. Having nearly two sides begirt by the sea, the county derives a great part of its beauty and opulence from this circumstance. So commodiously has nature disposed the surface of East Lothian into ranges of hills and fertile dales, that some tourists, from topographical retrospection, have declared Haddingtonshire to be the Northampton of Great Britain. The fertility of East Lothian in the seventeenth century is ascertained by a passage in 'Whitelock's Memoirs,' where it is stated that the soldiers who accompanied Cromwell in his expedition into Scotland, in 1650, were astonished to find in that district 'the greatest plenty of corn they ever saw, not one of the fields being fallow.' But it is since the period of the union that in this district, particularly, agricultural improvements have manifested themselves extensively and beneficially, and called forth the exertions and science of spirited individuals, proprietors of the soil: these have introduced the best systems of husbandry, and employed the most approved implements and machines—have drained, and planted and enclosed, until East Lothian has become one of the most beautiful and productive shires in North Britain. The application of steam-power here, to the laborious operations of thrashing, &c. presents to the eye the aspect of a manufacturing district, from the number of tall chimnies which rise in every direction. Exclusive of farming, which is the chief pursuit of the inhabitants, many on the coast are employed in fishing, fish-curing, salt-making, and commercial occupations; but manufactures are not extensive in any part of the county: linen and woollen manufactories once existed, but have been long discontinued; the principal articles now exported from East Lothian are corn, whisky, ale, porter, coal, earthenware, soap, and fish. The west of the shire abounds with coal; besides which, limestone and red granite constitute the chief mineral substances. Several streams intersect the county, but none of them merit the title of river except the Tyne, which, passing Haddington, falls into the sea at Tynninghame, where it forms a bay. The shire is destitute of natural lakes, but this deficiency seems no way injurious to the district, and is amply made up by the Frith of Forth, which yields a large supply of fish.

Haddingtonshire comprises twenty-three complete parishes and two parts of parishes, and three Royal Burghs—HADDINGTON, DUNBAR and NORTH BERWICK: these join with Lauder (in Berwickshire), and Jedburgh (in Roxburghshire), in sending one member to parliament, and the COUNTY returns another. The greatest elevations in East Lothian, above the level of the sea, are—Traprain Law, 700 feet; North Berwick Law, 940; and Shartleton Hill, 1,615.

TOTAL POPULATION OF HADDINGTONSHIRE..... 30095 31164 35226 36242 6147

Note.—(a) Fala parish is mostly in Edinburghshire; the entire parish contains 437 inhabitants.

(b) The parish of Oldhamstocks is partly in Berwickshire, but the whole is entered here.

ABERLADY AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

THE parish of Aberlady lies on the south coast of the mouth of the Frith of Forth; it is very fertile, and contains an area of six square miles: it is bounded on the south by Gladsmuir and Haddington, and on the east also by the latter parish and Dirleton. The beach here presents such facilities for the disembarkation of an invading force, that in the course of the last war, when Britain was menaced with invasion by France, serious apprehensions were entertained, in all the southern districts of Scotland, that the enterprising and insidious Bonaparte might have thought proper to select it as one of the chief points of attack, in order to divide the operations of the British. The village is 15 miles w. of Edinburgh, 5½ w. n. w. of Haddington, and 4½ s. of Dirleton; situate at the head of a long flat sandy beach, and at the mouth of the small river Peffer. Though this place may be considered as the port of Haddington, it has neither harbour, nor pier.

James VI, by charter, erected this parish into a temporal barony, which grant it was said was confirmed by Charles, in 1633, but the privileges or immunities conferred thereby are not manifest in the present day. The Earl of Wemyss and March is patron of the parish; the seat of this nobleman, Gosford House, stands nearly a mile south-west of the village. The edifice, which is surrounded by beautiful enclosed grounds, contains a valuable collection of rare paintings, which are shewn, in a liberal and courteous manner to visitors. About a mile from Aberlady, on the north-east, is Luffness House, a mansion belonging to Sir Alexander Hope, built in 1549, as a fortification by the French general de Thermes, for the purpose of awing the garrison of Haddington, then in the possession of the English. The parish church is a neat structure; nearly opposite to it is the parochial school, a well-conducted institution.

ATHELSTANEFORD.

THIS parish lies on the north-east boundary of that of Haddington, and is separated on the north by Dirleton, from the mouth of the Forth; and the small village lies within 5½ miles s. of North Berwick, 5 s. e. of Aberlady, and 3 n. e. from Haddington. It contains a neat modern church and parochial school, a brewery and a manufactory for edge tools. This parish possesses considerable interest from the circumstance of having for its ministers successively, in the early part of the last century, two men of eminent poetical genius—Blair, author of 'The Grave,' and Home, the author of 'Douglas.' The manse occupied by the former stood opposite the present modern manse, near the west end of the church-yard. The site is now comprised in the minister's garden, where an apple tree is pointed out as having stood close to the window of the poet's study. On the author of 'Douglas' leaving his pastoral charge, which he did from disgust of the proceedings instituted against him by his presbytery and the kirk in general, for the publication of so secular a work, he built and retired to an elegant mansion, in the neighbourhood still exhibited as a pattern of his taste. About a mile west of the village stand all that remains of Garleton Castle.

DIRLETON, WITH GULANE AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DIRLETON, one of the neatest rural villages in this county, and perhaps in Scotland, is 20 miles E.N.E. of Edinburgh, 7 n. of Haddington, 4½ n.e. of Aberlady, and nearly 3 w. of North Berwick; delightfully situate at the head of a low meadow extending about a mile and a half towards the sea—the houses, which for the most part are built in a plain neat Gothic style, having tastefully arranged gardens, nearly surround a fine and extensive triangular green, interspersed with trees. On the south side of this open space stands the venerable and magnificent ruin of Dirleton Castle, embosomed among evergreens, and its massive towers richly clothed with ivy. The origin of this castle is lost in the darkness of the middle ages—it is ascertained, however, to have belonged to a noble family in the thirteenth century named DeVallebus or DeVaux, from whom it was taken after a tedious siege by Edward I, in 1298. In 1650 it was reduced and dismantled by the parliamentary General Lambert. About the middle of the fifteenth century, this castle and the estate bestowed the title of Earl of Dirleton on the Halyburton family.

From ancient documents, it would appear that a collegiate church was founded here in 1444 by Sir Walter Halyburton; but little is known of its character or site. The present parish church, which stands a little below the green, is a handsome modern erection, bearing date 1661, and considerably enlarged in 1825—it has a substantial square tower. The parish school stands near the church. In 1819 a parish savings' bank was established in Dirleton; there is also a national bank for savings, unconnected with the parochial one; and a friendly society. About half a mile north-west of the village is Archirfield House, the handsome and hospitable mansion of Robert Ferguson, Esq. member for the county, to whose praiseworthy exertions and beneficial improvements, in connexion with his lady, the exemplary and liberal patroness of the place, and proprietrix of the estate by descent, Dirleton owes the distinction which belongs to it as being a village of surpassing rural beauty and neatness. The parish, which extends about six miles in length by four and a half in breadth, is low, and with the exception of a sandy stripe along the shore, which is used as a rabbit warren, is fertile to a degree not surpassed by any district in East Lothian, yielding excellent green crops and pasture. Besides Dirleton, the parish contains three other villages—GULANE, FENTON and KINGSTON.

GULANE, or Goolan, is a small but respectable village of rather ancient aspect, two miles south-west from Dirleton. At one time this was the capital of the parish to which it gave its name; but in 1612 the seat of worship was removed by act of parliament to Dirleton, and at the same time changing the name of the parish to its present appellation. On the east side of the Links stand the ruins of the ancient kirk, which was dedicated to St Andrew, and was well endowed. It is mentioned by Grose, that the last vicar of the church of Gulane, before its abandonment, was deprived of his living by James VI, for no other misdemeanor than that of smoking tobacco, a custom which the king, it is said, held in abhorrence. On the small bleak island of Fidra, lying off this coast, was an ecclesiastical structure, which served the purpose of a lazaretto in times of severe plague; and its windows acted as beacons to the mariner at night, in warning him of the dangers of an unsafe shore. The Links in the vicinity of Gulane are the habitation of vast numbers of rabbits, and are farmed as a warren at a considerable rent; the markets of Edinburgh are supplied with great quantities annually from the burrows here. The downs of this neighbourhood have been long celebrated for the rearing and training race, or fine riding horses. The village of Gulane contained, in 1836, two hundred and sixty-six persons.

DUNBAR,

WITH BELHAVEN, EAST-BARNS, WEST-BARNS, SPOTT AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUNBAR is a royal burgh and sea-port, the seat of a presbytery, and the capital of the parish of its name and of the eastern part of the district of East Lothian; 28 miles E. of Edinburgh, 11 E. of Haddington, and 30 N. N. W. of Berwick-upon-Tweed; occupying a slightly elevated piece of ground on the shore of the North Sea. Dunbar, at a very early period, was considered a place of strength and commercial importance; but there was no harbour, until Oliver Cromwell, by a grant of £300, began or promoted the construction of one, which now forms the east pier of the present harbour; in 1820 it was improved, with the addition of a good dry and graving dock; still the access is difficult and dangerous. On the west side of the harbour, and within high-water mark, stand the venerable ruins of a castle, which in former ages must have been very extensive and formidable; it is based upon rocks, but the date of its erection cannot be conjectured: it was always considered a station of great defensive consequence, as a key to Scotland on the east border; and it has been often besieged, and as often bravely defended. In this castle Edward II took refuge, after his defeat at Bannockburn; and to this secure asylum Bothwell fled, and left the unfortunate Mary in the hands of the associated lords, after the disastrous rencontre at Carberry-hill: it was subsequently demolished by order of the Scottish parliament, and nothing but the dilapidated fragments of this once almost impregnable fortress are now visible. On a columnar rocky projection, between these ruins and the harbour, is the battery, constructed for fifteen guns, but now mounting only six four-pounders, and the carriages of these appear to be rapidly decaying.

The town is built upon a gentle rise from the beach; the principal street is wide and spacious, and the chief thoroughfares are Macadamized; the streets and superior class of shops are lighted with gas; and a good supply of soft water is conveyed to the town, from a distance of two miles, by means of pipes. On the north side of High-street stands the principal inn, rebuilt within these few years in a handsome style, with ample accommodation in the rear for stabling, &c.: in the same street is an establishment belonging to the Commercial Bank of Scotland, and several insurance agency offices; and in Westport-street is a branch of the British Linen Company's bank. The houses are generally large and of pleasing exterior, and few towns present to the stranger a more agreeable and respectable appearance. Dunbar House, the mansion of the Earl of Lauderdale, stands at the northern end of the main street; its grand front faces the sea, and consists of two extensive wings, with a circular centre, forming an elegant elevated portico, supported by handsome corresponding pillars; on the top of the centre, at the back of the edifice and facing the street, is a finely executed large proportioned figure of that ideal animal the sphinx, in a couchant position, and the wings erect.

The herring fishery has long been a very considerable source of wealth to Dunbar. Large quantities of this fish are sent here in sloops from the more northern parts, to be cured into white or red herrings, and are then exported to the Baltic, the Mediterranean, the West Indies, and to Ireland; as many as ten thousand barrels have been cured here in one season, but of late years a material decrease has been experienced. Cod-fishing is likewise a profitable pursuit here; the produce is mostly despatched to meet the London demand; and Edinburgh is also a market for white fish, lobsters, &c., in great supply from this port. Application has been made to parliament for an act to construct a railway from Edinburgh through Haddington to this town, and to continue the line from hence to Newcastle; whence, by means of others, already, or about to be commenced, completely through to London, a valuable communication would be effected, between this port and others on the eastern coast, with the British metropolis. An opinion is very generally adopted, by the commercial classes of Dunbar, that if the port possessed a sufficiently capacious harbour, it would be employed in the shipment of all the heavy goods manufactured in Glasgow for the continental ports, when a railway shall be formed between that city and this place—as by this mode of transit a week (now in most instances lost by shipping merchandise in the western harbours) would be saved in embarking goods on the German ocean. At present there are eighteen vessels belonging to the port, of the aggregate burden of 1,233 tons. The chief imports are coals, foreign corn and timber; the exports, whisky, corn and vegetables. The manufactures of Dunbar were at one period numerous and extensive: the most important branches now in operation are those of ironfounding, for which there are two establishments—of ropeworks, the like number—of shipbuilding, for which there is one dock—and of fish-curing, comprising four extensive concerns. The domestic trade furnishes all the necessary articles of life, and the shops exhibit a respectable display of useful and fashionable productions. Dunbar was elevated to the rank of a royal burgh by David II, and its burghal privileges were confirmed and extended by James IV and James VI: it is governed by a provost and three bailies, a treasurer, town clerk, and chamberlain, with fifteen members of council. This burgh joins (by the provisions of the reform act) with Jedburgh, Lauder, Haddington, and North Berwick, in returning a member to parliament.

At the southern end of the High-street stands the elegant parish church, the erection of which commenced (on the site of the old kirk) in the summer of the year 1819, and it was opened on the 16th of September, 1821: its architectural style is the modern Gothic, and the body of the edifice very commodious, containing eighteen hundred sittings; a very handsome square tower, with a pinnacle at each corner, embellishes the structure: the entire of the building is of a rather dark red stone, not unlike brick when seen at a distance; but the quality of the material is considered of superior excellence and durability: the completion of the fabric cost upwards of £8,000. The interior is enriched with a splendid marble monument to the memory of George Home, lord high treasurer of Scotland in the reign of James VI; the height of this fine memorial is twenty-six feet, and its breadth twelve: while the church was rebuilding, the most judicious care was taken not to injure or disturb what is deemed the finest piece of tomb sculpture in Scotland. The seceders have two places of worship here, and the Wesleyan methodists one. The town has the advantage of a good grammar-school, wherein all the useful branches of education are taught: a commodious new building was erected in 1823 (on the beach, near the church), consisting of two wings, with a house for the master in the centre; it is an addition of great utility and convenience to this excellent establishment. There are several other institutions, belonging to the burgh and parish, of a praiseworthy nature—among which are a mechanics' institute, the Dunbar parochial school (situate at West Barns), and a charity school for children of both sexes of the humbler class.

The country about Dunbar is extremely pleasant; and the prospects from the high grounds, which rise gradually from the sea-coast, are extensive, and present a variety of delightful objects; the most striking of these are the North Berwick Law and Tantallan Castle, the Bass, the Isle of May, the Frith of Forth, and the mountains of Angus. The parish of Dunbar extends about eight miles along the coast; the soil is rich and dry, and the land is considered as fertile, and as early in its productions, as any in Scotland. The market is held on Tuesday, when the quality of the grain brought to it is marked by the farmers, in carts, and delivered immediately on being sold; there are two annual fairs—one on the first Tuesday after the 26th of May, the other on the first Tuesday after the 22nd of November. The population of Dunbar parish, in 1836, was 4,236—and of the burgh, 3,017 of that number; the increase since the last census, and those preceding, will be seen by consulting the population table in a previous page.

BELHAVEN is an exceedingly neat village, included within the jurisdiction of the burgh of Dunbar, situate about a mile west of that town, at the head of a small bay of the sea, which in former times formed a good harbour. It gives the title of lord to a branch of the family of Hamilton. A large brewery, and works for making bricks and tiles, are established here.

EAST BARNs is a village in the parish of Dunbar, about three miles south-east of that town, and a little to the right of the road leading thence to Berwick.

WEST BARNs, another part of the royalty of Dunbar, is about half a mile west of Belhaven. In this village, on the river Biel, are established the town's extensive corn and flour mills; it is likewise the seat of the parochial school of Dunbar, an excellently conducted and numerously attended institution; and there is a large manufactory for agricultural implements here.

SPOTT is a small rural village in the parish of its name, situate two miles south of Dunbar. The parish is of an irregular figure, being about five miles in length by two in breadth; the low country is well enclosed and cultivated, and the higher grounds afford good pasture. Spott House, in this parish, is romantically perched upon a rock, rising from a low glen, surrounded with beautiful pleasure-grounds. In this neighbourhood was fought, on the 3d of September, 1650, the battle of Down-hill (so decisively unfortunate to the royal cause), in which the Scotch forces were totally routed by Cromwell.

FALA and SOUTRA, a united parish; the first of which is within the eastern border of Edinburghshire, the other in the county of Haddington. The villages of Fala and Fala-Dam are situate on the road from Edinburgh to Lauder, about 14 miles from the former, and 11 from Haddington. The parish comprehends part of the Lammermoor ridge, of which Soutra hill is the north-west point. From the foot of the hill the surface is nearly level, having a tolerably fertile soil; and the lands are in a high state of cultivation. On Soutra hill are the ruins of an hospital, founded in 1164, by Malcolm IV, for the relief of pilgrims and poor sickly people.

The parish of HUMBLE lies in the south-western part of the county of Haddington; is bounded by Salton and Ormiston on the north, part of Bolton and Gifford on the east, and Fala and Soutra on the west. It is five miles in length, by rather more than three in breadth, lying chiefly on the Lammermoor range of hills near Berwickshire. The high lands are pastoral, but the low grounds are well enclosed and cultivated. Limestone and coal are said to lie beneath the surface of some parts, but neither has been wrought. There is no assemblage of dwellings in this parish to constitute a village. A church of the establishment and a parochial school are in the parish.

GARVALD AND BARO.

THIS, a united parish, is bounded by Morham and Whittingham on the north and east, and by Gifford on the west; extending from near the centre of the county southward, among the Lammermoor hills, to the borders of Berwickshire. Within the parish are both fine arable lands and sheep walks; and the district contains a number of remains of antiquity. Among the latter are the ruins of Nunraw, a nunnery once of great importance, now the residence and property of Miss Hay. The village of Garvald, a nice sequestered rural little place, is seated in a fertile valley, on the banks of the small river Hoper, or Hope burn, 22 miles E. S. E. of Edinburgh, 8½ s. w. of Dunbar, 5 s. of Linton, and nearly 6 s. E. of Haddington. The population of the village is about three hundred. The post town is Haddington.

GIFFORD AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

GIFFORD is a respectable and thriving village, and the capital of the parish of Yester, 20 miles E. S. E. of Edinburgh, 9 s. E. of Tranent, and 4 s. of Haddington, delightfully situate on a rivulet, tributary to the Tyne. The village, which is well built, consists of two spacious streets, of unequal length, one end of the longest being ornamented by a fine avenue of lofty trees, which extends for a mile in a southerly direction and terminates at Yester House, the noble family mansion of the Marquess of Tweeddale—whose example and fostering influence has accomplished so much in advancing the agriculture of Scotland. This nobleman, among other recent improvements, has invented and brought to a state of great perfection, a machine for making bricks and tiles, but chiefly applied to the formation of the latter, used for draining. The clay mill and tile works, belonging to the Marquess, are situate about half a mile south-west of Gifford. About the like distance to the north is a woollen manufactory, which has been established for some years; and in the village is a sawing mill, upon an improved principle. The parish church stands at the eastern end of the shorter street, and the parochial school at the north end of the longer one: the former edifice, which was erected in 1708, contains a pulpit of oak, of much greater antiquity than the building itself, called Knox's pulpit, so designated from this celebrated preacher having been, it is said, born in Gifford, but which circumstance is denied by very credible authorities, and the honour bestowed upon Haddington. The scenery around here is very romantic, and few places can boast of more picturesque or beautiful prospects than are presented to the eye in the neighbourhood of Gifford. Society' hold a meeting here annually, on the first Tuesday in October, for the shew of rams. The population of the village, in 1836, was about five hundred and fifty.

POST OFFICE, James Wallace, Post Master.—Letters from HADDINGTON and all parts arrive (by foot post) every afternoon at half-past two, and are despatched every morning at seven.

HADDINGTON AND BOLTON.

HADDINGTON, a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, the county town of East Lothian, and the capital of the parish of its name, is 17 miles E. of Edinburgh, 38 N. W. of Berwick-upon-Tweed, 11 W. of Dunbar, and 9½ S. of North Berwick; eligibly and pleasantly situate on the left bank of the river Tyne, and on the great road leading from the metropolis of Scotland to that of England. Haddington is unquestionably of very ancient origin; for in a charter granted by Ada, the widow of Prince Henry (and mother of Malcolm IV and William the Lion), dated 1178, she styled it Meum Burgum de Haddington. The suburb of the town, called Nungate, derives its name from a nunnery founded by Ada, which stood about a quarter of a mile from the town; it was in this abbey or nunnery that a parliament was convened on the 7th July, 1548, during the siege of Haddington, when consent was given to the marriage of the unfortunate Mary with the Dauphin of France, and to her being educated at that court. At the east end of Nungate is seen the roofless ruin of St. Martin's church, which has been but little used since the reformation. The town has suffered severely, at different periods, by conflagrations and inundations: in 1216 it was burnt by King John, and in 1244 it shared the same fate by accident; in 1358 whole villages were swept off by the overflowing of the Tyne, the waters of which approached the monastery, 'when' (it is related by a monkish chronicle) 'a nun seized the statue of the Virgin, and threatened to throw it into the flood unless she (Mary) protected her house from destruction—whereupon the water gradually retired within its ordinary banks.' The last great conflagration, which was accidental, occurred about two hundred years ago by the carelessness of a nurserymaid; from this originated the ceremony of admonishing (by the bellman, in verse,) the inhabitants to be 'careful of their coal and candle,' which is observed during the winter months to this day. The 4th October, 1775, is memorable for the rising of the Tyne seventeen feet, at which height it continued for several hours; a brass plate recording this occurrence is fixed at the east corner of High-street.

Considering the great antiquity of this burgh, it may be justly styled handsome. The streets, which are spacious, are well lighted with gas by a company formed in 1835, whose works are erected at the west end of the town, in which quarter conspicuously stand the County Buildings: the architecture is of the old English style; they contain sheriff and justice of peace court-rooms, with appropriate offices, and jury and witness rooms; the erection of this edifice cost £5,470. The Town's Buildings, to which was added, in 1831, a fine spire, one hundred and seventy feet in height, at an expense of about £1,500, may be now recognized as another feature of improvement to the burgh; they comprise the burgh council-room, assembly and public lecture rooms, and the county and burgh gaol: this pile, which evidently has been erected at different periods, forms the extreme western end of that long range of buildings separating the spacious High-street from the equally wide but inappropriately named Back-street, where is held one of the most animated grain markets in the kingdom. The suburb of Nungate is approached across the Tyne by the Waterloo-bridge, of one arch, built in 1817; as also by another bridge, ancient and narrow, of three small arches. The corporation of this burgh consists of a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and nineteen councillors; they hold a court every Saturday; a sheriff and commissary court sits every Thursday; one for small debts every alternate Thursday; a justice of peace court the first Tuesday of each month, except those of March, May and August, when it takes place on the Thursday instead; a quarter session is held on the first Tuesday of the last-mentioned months, and on the last Tuesday of October; and an adjourned quarter session on the second Tuesday in January. The trustees of the great turnpike roads hold general meetings on the first Tuesdays of March, May and August, and the last Tuesday of October. Haddington joins with Dunbar, Jedburgh, Lauder, and North Berwick, in returning a representative to the legislature; the present member is Robert Steuart, Esq., one of the lords of the treasury.

The trade of Haddington consists principally in corn; on the market days immense quantities are brought for sale, and it is considered the leading grain-mart of Scotland. The present manufactures comprise sackings, hats, fire-grates of the most splendid style and pattern, nails, and agricultural implements; there are likewise three breweries, an ironfoundry, two tanneries, three corn-mills, and (in the Nungate) a considerable distillery. Two banking establishments diffuse monetary accommodation—a branch of the British Linen Company's firm, and one of the Bank of Scotland. There are two superior inns, the 'George' and the 'Bell,' both in High-street; at the former is the excise-office. An agricultural society was instituted in Haddington long since, and another at Salton; they were united in 1819, and now form one of the most flourishing local associations in the kingdom, annually distributing in premiums nearly £300: the Marquess of Tweeddale is patron; the same liberal-minded nobleman presides at 'the Tyueside games,' held annually in Amisfield park, generally about the third week of July, at which nearly £40. is awarded in prizes to those excelling in certain athletic exercises practised on those occasions.

The parish church is a venerable and capacious structure; it was in former ages the place of worship of the Franciscan monks, to whose extensive religious establishment it was attached; from its architecture and some traditionary records it is supposed to have been erected about the twelfth or thirteenth century; the west end is the only portion now used, in the repair and improvement of which nearly £6,000. were expended in 1811; the east end of the ancient monastery, and the old square tower, are now a ruin: in a corner of the edifice is the burial-place of the Lauderdale family, who for many generations possessed Lethington, or 'Lennox's Love,' at present the seat of Lady Blantyre; and in the aisle there are many statues of the Lauderdale succession, large as life, reclined on beds of state. The designations of the other places of divine worship, with their situations and respective officiating ministers, will be found enumerated in a subsequent page; exclusive of these, an additional church of the establishment is about to be erected, and a considerable sum has been subscribed for that purpose. Haddington lays claim to the honour of being the natal place of that unbending reformer John Knox, and the house where it is contended he was born was not long since generally pointed out in Gifford-gate; the village of Gifford, however (described in page 471), contests this claim. The charitable institutions are numerous, and highly creditable to the burgh, as are the educational establishments; and several societies and clubs are established on the most respectable footing, for various laudable objects.

The weekly market is held on Friday: the sale of oats and barley commences at half-past twelve, and of wheat at one; that of dairy produce, poultry, &c., at ten in the morning. Trysts are held on the second Friday after the 4th of May, and on the Friday before the second Monday in November; fairs, on the second Tuesday of July and the second Thursday of October. The agricultural society hold their meetings here, for the show of stock, implements, seeds, &c., on the first Friday of April, and on the Friday before Christmas-day, the latter being their anniversary meeting; they hold other meetings at Salton and Gifford, which see. The population of the burgh, in 1831, was 3,021.

BOLTON is a small village in the parish of its name, situate on the road from Haddington to East Salton, three miles south-west of the former town. About the close of the fifteenth century the lands of Bolton were wrongfully seized by the Hepburns; one of which infamous family, John Hepburn, was executed as the associate of the Earl of Bothwell, his chief, in the murder of Darnley. The church and the parochial school are both in the village: the former is a handsome substantial erection, in the modern Gothic style, ornamented with a square tower, and the latter is a well constructed and judiciously regulated institution.

INNERWICK AND OLDHAMSTOCKS.

THE parish of INNERWICK is bounded by Oldhamstocks on the east, Spott and Dunbar on the west, the sea on the north, and Cranshaws and Longformacus, in Berwickshire, on the south; it measures ten miles in length, by a breadth varying from two to three. The land towards the sea coast is level and very fertile; inland it rises into gently swelling hills, which are ornamented with a variety of plantations, and the fields are all well enclosed. The village of Innerwick stands 30 miles E. of Edinburgh, 14 E. of Haddington, and 4 s. E. of Dunbar, lying rather more than a mile to the west of the road leading from the latter town to Berwick. The church, which was built in 1782, and is a neat edifice, stands on a judiciously selected site close by the village, about a mile east of which is the modern and handsome mansion of James Hunter, esq. of Thurston; and about three quarters of a mile to the south-east of Innerwick, are the remains of the castle of that name. The situation of the ruins is rather secluded; they stand on the summit of a rocky eminence, overhanging a woody glen which divided the castle from the fortlet of Thornton. The castle, which originally belonged to the Hamiltons, of Innerwick, was besieged, taken and destroyed, after an obstinate resistance, by the troops under the Duke of Somerset. There are likewise the remains of several military encampments in this neighbourhood. Dunbar is the post town for this district.

LINTON IN PRESTONKIRK,

STENTON, WHITEKIRK AND TYNNINGHAME, AND WHITTINGHAM.

LINTON, or EAST LINTON, is a village in the parish of Prestonkirk; 22 miles E. of Edinburgh, 8 s. s. E. of North Berwick, 6 w. of Dunbar, and 5 E. of Haddington; elegantly situate on the left bank of the Tyne: and is a place of great thoroughfare, becoming very populous and rising fast into public notice. In the village is a very extensive distillery, belonging to Messrs. Dunlop and Co. The parish church is at PRESTON, about half a mile north-east of Linton; in the latter is a united secession chapel and the parochial school, also several private seminaries. The parish of Prestonkirk measures about four miles each way; the surface is agreeably varied, and the soil fertile and well cultivated. About a mile south-west of Linton are the ruins of Hales Castle, noted as having been one of the residences of Mary and Bothwell; and one mile north of the village is the elegant mansion of Smeaton. From the southern part of the parish rises the mountain of Traprane Law to the height of seven hundred feet above the level of the sea. A market or meeting is held at Linton every Monday during the harvest season, for hiring reapers.

STENTON is a small village in the parish of its name; four miles and a half east of Linton. The principal object of attraction in the parish is a beautiful artificial serpentine piece of water, about a mile south-east of the village; it is nearly two miles in length, and averages about four hundred yards in breadth, though in some places it is double the latter proportion, and in others much narrower; and its course is so sinuous that the stranger can form no just idea of its length:

its banks are high, steep, and well clothed with wood; and the scenery throughout the meanderings of the lake is of a delightful and picturesque character: by the urbanity and kindness of the proprietor, R. Ferguson, Esq., of Raith, M.P., parties are allowed to ramble through the grounds and plantations, or make excursions upon the glassy surface of the lake, the accommodation of boats for that purpose being provided by this honourable gentleman. A fair is held at the village on the last Tuesdays of June and October.

WHITEKIRK is a very small village in the united parish of Whitekirk and Tynninghame, four miles north of Linton; it consists of but a few humble dwellings, the ancient parish church and manse, and the parochial school. Two miles south of Whitekirk is TYNNINGHAME village, also inconsiderable both in size and population. The elegant family seat of the Earl of Haddington, Tynninghame House, is half a mile from the village, enchantingly environed by woods and walks of superlative beauty, at the head of a park sloping gently southward to the Tyne, near its mouth.

WHITTINGHAM is an extensive parish, reaching from the borders of Berwickshire a length of eleven miles northward, but varying in breadth from six to four miles, and still narrower in the middle. In the northern division of the parish are the beautiful pleasure grounds and plantations surrounding the fine mansion of Whittingham, the seat of James Balfour, Esq. The village is in the neighbourhood of this much admired residence, three miles south of the village of Linton, and six east of Haddington.

POST OFFICE, PRESTONKIRK, Janet Gibb, Post Mistress.—Letters from EDINBURGH and HADDINGTON arrive every morning at ten, and are despatched every forenoon at half-past eleven.—Letters from DUNBAR, AYTON, BERWICK and BELFORD arrive every day at twelve, and are despatched every morning at half-past nine.

NORTH BERWICK AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

NORTH BERWICK is a royal burgh and a sea-port, 23 miles N. E. of Edinburgh, 11 N. W. of Dunbar, and 10 N. of Haddington; situate on a low sandy plain on the shore of the German ocean, at the entrance of the Frith of Forth. It consists principally of one long main street, running east and west—another proceeding in a contrary direction, towards the sea—and two or three small ones, or lanes; in that street running seaward are some houses of a superior kind, with a few trees in front. The chief trade of Berwick is the export of corn, potatoes, &c.; the imports are coal, and bones for manure: six vessels belong to the port, of the aggregate burden of 230 tons. The harbour, which is small, is formed by a tolerably good pier;

but, although there is water enough for a large class of vessels, the rocks render the entrance so difficult that but small ones make the attempt; these can ride here in perfect safety, the harbour being boomed; Fiddra roads, about two miles to the west, are considered perfectly safe. In the offing are several bleak islets, only of value as rabbit warrens; and four miles to the east, within two miles of the coast, is the Bass Rock, the terror of seamen: it is a mile in circumference, and rises four hundred feet above the surface of the sea; the channel betwixt it and the land is deep, and is frequently taken by steam-vessels to and from London and Leith. The Bass is inaccessible on all sides, except by a narrow pass on the south-west, towards the land; a fearful caverned passage penetrates through the rock from east to west, which may be explored at low water. Commanding the landing-place are the remains of a small fortification, which at one time was of considerable strength, and could then be reached only by ladders, or a bucket and chains; the fort had accommodations for upwards of one hundred men; it existed as a strong hold for a long period, was a state prison during the reigns of the two Stuarts, and became distinguished, in the early part of the reign of William III, for the persevering fortitude with which the governor held out against the new dynasty; it defied every effort to reduce it for several years—obtaining, in the end, the equivocal honour of having been the last spot of British ground which acknowledged the sway of a constitutional and defined monarchy; the prison and fortifications were subsequently dismantled, but the walls and dungeons are in a great measure entire. Like Ailsa Craig, the Bass is inhabited by myriads of sea-fowl, especially solan geese; and it affords pasturage for about a score of sheep, the flesh of which is in great request among epicures. Nearly opposite to the Bass, and about three miles east of Berwick, are the interesting ruins of Tantallon Castle, referred to by Sir Walter Scott as the parting scene of Angus and Marmion, in the poem of 'Marmion.' About a quarter of a mile south-west are seen the extensive remains of an abbey, said to have been founded by David I for a sisterhood of Cistercian nuns; and not far distant rises North Berwick Law, a conical hill, the summit of which is more than nine hundred feet above the level of the sea.

The date of the first charter, erecting Berwick into a royal burgh, is unknown, that instrument having been lost or destroyed; James VI, however, granted to it a writ confirmatory of all its former privileges, by which it is governed by two bailies, a treasurer, and nine councillors; the burgh joins with Haddington, Dunbar, Lauder and Jedburgh in returning a member to parliament. Behind the High-street stands the parish church; at the end of the Westgate is the united secession chapel, rebuilt in 1831; in the latter thoroughfare is the commodious parochial school; and in the Market-place, where also is the court-house, is a new burgh school, erected in 1830. The North Berwick Golfing Club meet at the 'Dalrymple Arms' inn on the first week in the months of May, June, July, and September. Two annual fairs are held; one on the first Thursday after Whitsuntide, the other on the first Thursday after Martinmas, both old style.

PRESTONPANS,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF PRESTON, COCKENZIE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

PRESTONPANS is a market and post town, and burgh of barony; 9 miles E. of Edinburgh, 14 s. w. of North Berwick,  $9\frac{1}{2}$  w. n. w. of Haddington, and 3 E. of Musselburgh; situate on the shore of the Frith of Forth: it consists principally of one long street (not remarkably handsome), running parallel with the frith, and possesses no public buildings worthy of particular notice. The harbour is situate a little to the westward of the town, and is called Morison Haven; it has a good quay for shipping coal and the manufactures of the place, which comprise earthenware, bricks, tiles, soap and salt; the latter originated here at an early date, having been made by the monks in 1189; the other works are of more recent introduction, as are the breweries for ale and porter, and an extensive distillery. Oysters are taken in abundance in the Forth, near the town; and considerable quantities are sent to the markets of Edinburgh and Newcastle, and even to London. The mines of coal are very rich in this neighbourhood; a seam of this valuable mineral is now being worked by Sir G. G. Suttie, Bart., the proprietor, at Preston Grange colliery, within two hundred yards of the quay at Morison Haven, which is from eight to ten feet in thickness—beneath which it is ascertained there exist eight or nine other strata, making an aggregate body of working coal of full forty feet: the roof of this mine is composed of a stratum of fire-clay from two to three feet thick, and a band of ironstone of six inches in thickness. The mines extend a considerable distance under the sea; that of the Preston Links colliery, situate at the east end of the town, has already been driven two hundred yards beyond high-water mark, and is expected to be carried successfully still further. Prestonpans received its charter of erection as a burgh of barony in 1617, in favour of Sir John Hamilton, of Preston, which ancient village (Preston) is included with the eastern part of the town in the charter; a suburb called 'the Kuittle,' or more properly Cuthil, the western portion, also enjoys a charter, which was granted originally to the abbey of Newbattle: this division is possessed by Sir G. G. Suttie, Bart.

 The places of worship are the parish church and a small meeting-house for methodists. The parochial school, a subscription library, and some benefit societies, are in the town; the principal charity, however, is Schaw's Hospital, at Preston village—an extensive building, erected in 1831, in the old English style of architecture, at an expense of nearly £3,000, out of the funds bequeathed by its benevolent founder, Dr. Schaw, in 1781: the institution was first opened in 1784, in Preston House, which stood behind the present erection; it was founded for the education and maintenance of twenty-four boys, children of indigent parents—those of the name of Schaw, McNeil, Cunningham and Stewart, having a preference of entry; the establishment is conducted by a governor and a matron. The principal seats in the neighbourhood are Preston Grange, Drummore and Northfield. Preston Tower, in this vicinity, formerly the seat of the Hamiltons of Preston, is an attractive ruin. At the distance of a mile and a half from the town, at a hamlet called Meadow Mill, was fought the battle to which the name of Prestonpans has been appended, on the 21st of September, 1745, between the adherents of the Stuart family and the English troops under the command of General Cope, in which the latter were routed. In this engagement fell Colonel Gardiner; the house (Bankton House) occupied by this revered officer, and in which he expired after the battle, stands a little to the west of Meadow Mill, and is still pointed out to the inquiring stranger. The markets were originally held on Wednesdays and Saturdays, but Friday is now acknowledged as the market-day.

COCKENZIE is a fishing village in the parish of Tranent, one mile east of Prestonpans, situate on the road leading to North Berwick and the shore of the Frith of Forth. It has a small harbour, substantially constructed by the Messrs. Cadell, for shipping the salt made here by them, and the coal obtained from their mines. A fair is held the first Thursday in November.

SALTON (EAST AND WEST), PENCAITLAND,

AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

EAST SALTON is a respectable village in the parish of Salton; 15 miles E. of Edinburgh, 5 s. w. of Haddington, and the like distance s. E. of Tranent. The parish lies chiefly in a fine fertile valley, on the north side of the Lammermoor hills; is well enclosed and cultivated, and various parts of the district are embellished with thriving plantations. This parish is worthy of notice as being the first seat of the manufacture of Hollands in Great Britain, as also for the preparation of Scotch barley, the introduction of both which into this country is ascribed, by some authorities, to Andrew Fletcher, and by others to the lady of that gentleman, who, going over to Holland in the year 1700, took with her—(the palm of zeal and ingenuity must be awarded to the lady)—James Meikle, a man skilled in mechanics, and brought back models of a barley-mill, and of other machines for weaving Holland cloth. In 1750 the first bleachfield of the British Linen Company was established here. The parish has, however, long since lost the importance that manufactures bestowed upon it, and it can now be classed only amongst the agricultural districts. The parish church, which stands in the village, was almost entirely rebuilt in 1805, in the modern Gothic style, and cruciform, having a fine spire ninety feet high. The celebrated Bishop Burnet had Salton for his first benefice, and for some years performed the duties of parish minister; and it was here that he used the only book of common prayer known to have existed in the episcopal church of Scotland during the reign of Charles II: this eminent churchman and historian bequeathed a valuable library to the parish, besides a considerable sum for educating, clothing and apprenticing thirty poor children; the proceeds of the bequest amount now to about £75. per annum. The small river Salton and the Tyne are boundary streams of the parish, which has abundance of excellent lime.

WEST SALTON, in the same parish, is about half a mile from East Salton; between the two villages is Salton Hall, an elegant mansion, the residence of Andrew Fletcher, Esq. The united East Lothian agricultural society hold a meeting at Salton annually, on the last Saturday of May, for the exhibition of young breeding stock. In the village is a good schoolhouse, erected in 1803, where one half of the children admitted under Bishop Burnet's charity are instructed, the remainder being taught in the parish school.

PENCAITLAND is a rural village, two miles and a half north-west of East Salton, in the parish of its name, which is divided into two nearly equal parts by the river Tyne. This district forms the eastmost limit of the great coal-range of the Lothians: the coal here is of an excellent quality, lying about fifty-six yards deep, in a nearly horizontal stratum of two feet nine inches thick; an inferior coal is, however, obtained, at only sixteen yards below the surface. Besides coal, the parish abounds in good limestone and freestone. On the west side of the Tyne stands a small but comfortable inn, a substantially-built parochial schoolhouse, and an ancient cross. On the eastern side of the river, which is crossed by an old stone bridge of three arches, is situate the ancient parish church; likewise Pencaitland House, the residence of Mr. A. G. Cuthbertson, a considerable coal proprietor. About half a mile to the north-west is Winton House, an extensive pile, partly ancient and partly modern, formerly the residence of the Earls of Winton, previous to the attainder of the Seton family in 1715. Fountain Hall, the seat of Sir T. D. Lauder, Bart., and Tyneholme House, are also handsome mansions in this parish.

TRANENT, GLADSMUIR WITH PENSTON, ORMISTON,

AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

TRANENT, a town or post-village in the parish of its name, is 10 miles E. of Edinburgh, 18 W. of Dunbar, and 7 W. of Haddington; situate on the main road from the latter town to the Scottish metropolis, and at the head of elevated ground. The town consists of a street running from west to east along the line of the public road, with another diverging from about the middle of it. Many of the inhabitants are engaged in the adjacent collieries, which have been wrought in this quarter from the very first discovery of coal in Scotland; others are occupied in agriculture; and on the coast, which bounds the northern extremity of the parish, numbers are devoted to the avocations of fishing and dredging for oysters, of which later there are numerous beds.

The church, which stands at the foot of the town, is a plain edifice, with a square tower; Col. Gardiner, who fell in the battle of Prestonpans, was interred in it. The united seeders have a handsome chapel, erected in 1826; and there are two schools, one parochial, the other subscriptional. Half a mile below the town, to the north-east, is Stiell's hospital, a neat and extensive structure, built in 1820; in it are educated one hundred and forty poor children, of which number ten receive clothing. Near the southern boundary of the parish is Elphinston Tower, once a baronial residence; and in another part of the parish are the ruins of Waterfall-side Castle, Seton House, and the remains of a once collegiate church. A county market is held in Tran-

ent every Monday during harvest, for hiring reapers.

GLADSMUIR is a beautiful arable parish, rising in a gentle acclivity from the south shore of the Firth of Forth. The parish church and school are situate on the main road between Haddington and Tranent, nearly four miles west of the former town and three east of the latter. The district abounds in coal, and several pits are wrought at PENSTON, which is the principal village in the parish, and chiefly inhabited by colliers. George Heriot, the founder of the hospital at Edinburgh, is said to have been a native of this parish; and Dr. Robertson was its clergyman, while engaged in writing the 'History of Scotland.' From the proximity of the hamlet of Gladsmuir to the scene of the battle of Prestonpans, that conflict was called, by the Jacobite party, 'the battle of Gladsmuir.'

The parish of ORMISTON lies in the western part of the county; it is chiefly level, under the best state of cultivation, and well enclosed and planted. The village is situate in the northern part of the parish, at the distance of two miles and a half north of Tranent; and consists of one spacious street, with a cross in the centre. The parish church stands a mile and a half to the south-west, and Ormiston Hall one mile south of the village. One mile further, on the summit of an eminence called Dodridge Law, are the traces of a Danish camp. There are two annual fairs held here—on the first Tuesday of July and fourth Tuesday of October.

INVERNESS-SHIRE.

THIS is a very extensive county, being the first in Scotland in magnitude, though tenth in population: it is bounded on the north by the counties of Ross and Cromarty, by those of Nairn and Moray, the frith of the latter also touching it on this quarter; on the shires of Perth and Argyle, with a small part of Aberdeenshire; and the Atlantic Ocean its eastern boundary: a small insulated district between the shires of Banff and Moray belongs and several of the Hebrides are politically attached to it. The county (excluding the isles) extends in length, from the point of Arisaig on the west to that of Ardersier on the east, about ninety-two miles, and its greatest breadth is nearly fifty miles: the whole surface comprises 4,054 square miles of land, and 191 of lakes; of cultivated land about 244,400 acres, and of uncultivated (according to estimation) about 2,350,000. The shire comprehends a variety of districts of local importance—as Badenoch in its south part, Lochaber on the south-west, Moidart on the west, Glengly on the north-west, Glengany in its central part, and others of less consequence, as Glengary, Glenmorison, Glenshiel, &c. The islands annexed to the county are Skye, Harris, North and South Uish, Benbecula, Barra, Eigg, Muck, Rum and Canna; besides a number of islets.

SURFACE OF THE COUNTY, SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—The greater part of the surface of this county consists of lofty mountains, which, especially towards the west, tower above each other in stupendous magnificence. It would be vain to attempt a particular description of the scenery to be met with in this great county, comprehending, as already mentioned, so many mountains—between all which are deep glens of a boundless variety, each having its stream and its lake, and many shrouded in woods. One of the mountains is, nevertheless, too conspicuous to pass over in silence—that is, the noble and celebrated Ben Nevis, the highest elevation in Great Britain, soaring to the height of 4,370 feet above the level of Loch Linnhe. This remarkable eminence stands to the south-east of Fort William, near the shore of an arm of the sea; from its summit, in clear weather, a view can be obtained across nearly the whole of the north of Scotland, from sea to sea; it is generally enveloped, however, in a mantle of clouds, and is toilsome in the ascent: it consists principally of a fine brown porphyry, and contains red granite of a most beautiful grain—it is said also to possess veins of silver and lead. Being cleft, in many places to the very base, by ravines and glens, its precipices are of prodigious altitude; one of them, the inaccessible eyrie of eagles, is nearly five hundred feet perpendicular; and in the fissures, even in the warmest weather, snow remains unmelted. Around its southern base flows the Nevis streamlet, through the glen of the same name: it was at the opening of this valley that the Marquess of Montrose achieved the brilliant victory of Inverlochy. Inverness-shire is divided into two almost equal parts, by a valley running from south-west to north-east, parallel to the Grampians: this valley is called Glen-more-na-h'Alabin, or the 'Great Glen of Albion,' and appears to be a deep continuous rent between the chains of enormous mountains which range in the same direction; through the greater part of its length the glen is filled with water, or rather an almost connected succession of lakes, not rising very considerably above the level of the sea—a circumstance which suggested the comprehensive plan of forming the Caledonian Canal; of that stupendous undertaking we shall have occasion to speak hereafter. On the eastern side of the county agriculture is conducted with as much skill, spirit and success, as in any district northward of the Grampians; in the interior, and on the western coast, it languishes under the natural obstructions of soil and climate. Along the whole of the western division, the climate is much more rainy than on the eastern side of the island; it is seldom fair weather in the latter with a westerly wind. On account of these disadvantages, the principal employment of the farmer in this district is the management of black cattle and sheep, especially the former; numerous herds of goats are likewise to be found in almost every parish. The mountains and forests are widely inhabited by the red deer and roe, who roam in safety through seclusions and lodge in recesses impenetrable to man; the alpine and common hare, and other species of game, are also abundant. The extensive plains which surround the lakes are in general fertile. The military roads in this county, made by the soldiers under General Wade, never fail to excite the astonishment of travellers; additional roads have of late years been formed, and bridges constructed, under the direction of government, through every district of this extensive shire. On the confines of the county are extensive tracts of natural wood, evidently the remains of much larger forests; the fir woods of Glenmore, and Strathspey, the properties of the Duke of Gordon and Sir James Grant, are supposed to be far more extensive than all the other natural woods in Scotland if summed together. The trees that grow naturally are oak, fir, birch, ash, mountain-ash, holly, elm, wildgreen, hazel, and the Scottish poplar; those planted are chiefly larch, spruce, silver-fir, beech, plane, and fruit trees. Those districts in cultivation, along with those in the course of gradual adaptation to purposes of husbandry, are in the north-east or Lowland quarter, where there are to be seen many fine fields yielding good crops of wheat, barley and oats; potatoes, in several parishes, are produced in great abundance. In the district in the vicinity of the Spey, near Castle Grant, a very improved system of cultivation has for many years been introduced. In this shire, as in other counties in the north, the removal of the poorer native classes, or small farmers, by the landlords, has thinned the population, expatriated thousands, and reduced to the lowest conceivable depths of human suffering those wretched families who have been permitted to remain in rude hamlets on the sea-shore. During the severe winter of 1836-7, the distresses of the more indigent inhabitants of the Highlands (owing to the deplorable failure of their naturally limited crops, the extreme inclemency of the weather, and the almost total destitution of fuel,) were of the most appalling description; in the islands, more particularly, this combination of calamities was experienced to a direful extent: in the isle of Skye the want of fuel had reduced the unhappy occupants to such a state of desperation, that, it has been asserted, lots were cast, among a certain number of poor families, to decide which should consent to the destruction of their hut for the purpose of furnishing fire-wood for the general good. The case of these poor people excited universal sympathy throughout the kingdom, and subscriptions, headed munificently by London, poured in for their relief; the sum thus promptly raised was very considerable, and while we write this, large amounts continue to be received. Among the provincial towns of England, Manchester stood eminently conspicuous in the humane and benevolent work—upwards of £2,500. having been subscribed in a comparatively short time, and the books were not yet closed, when this article was put to press. We now return from this digression to our more general and cheering account of the capabilities of this wide district. The exports of the county may be briefly articles of cattle, wool and corn—the skins of goats, deer, roes, foxes, hares and herring, dried and salted fish, and fir timber, with the produce of the labours of hand and thread manufactures; the spinning of flax and wool is the occupation of the females, and the respective families, over the whole county: the principal imports will be detailed under the head of INVERNESS. Limestone is everywhere abundant; and in many parts are to be found marble, granite (the latter said to be the most beautiful in the world), and silver, iron and lead ores.

RIVERS, LAKES AND CANALS.—The principal river is the NESS, which flows from Loch Ness to the Moray Frith; the next is the SPEY, which, though a larger river in its lower parts, is about the same size while running through the shire: the smaller rivers are the BEAULY, the FOYERS, the GARRY, the COILTRIE, the MORRISTON, the ENNERIC, the KINNIE, with others of still minor note; the whole produce ample supplies of trout and salmon. On the Foyers is a celebrated waterfall, descending in three leaps to the depth of, together, two hundred feet; a dense mist is continually seen rising from the broken water, and the noise resulting from the fall may be heard at a considerable distance. The CALEDONIAN CANAL, before adverted to, is composed of a chain of lakes, connected with the sea on either side of the island by artificial water-courses and locks; and stretches across Inverness-shire, in a south-westerly direction, from Inverness, on the Moray Frith, to Loch Eil, on the western coast—a distance of about sixty miles. To connect the several lakes by artificial navigation, and thereby the Western Ocean with the North Sea, by the Moray Frith, was an undertaking to which a great portion of the public attention had long been directed; and it was at length commenced by government, in 1803-4. After a persevering labour of about eighteen years, and at an expense of upwards of £800,000, the line was opened for the admission of vessels in 1822: up to 1830, the total expense fell very little short of one million sterling. The canal part is twenty feet deep, fifty feet wide at bottom, and one hundred and ten feet wide at the surface—which affords sailing facilities to frigates of thirty-two guns, or merchant vessels of a similar size and draught. It was anticipated that the revenue arising from the canal passage would exceed £40,000. per annum; but, some few years since, the annual dues did not amount to much more than £2,500: indeed, magnificent as this national work truly is, it is humiliating to reflect that it is held in little estimation by traders, being at present but the chief thoroughfare of steam-boats in communication between Glasgow and Inverness. Besides the lochs which have been made subservient to this great line of canal navigation, there are others of greater or less magnitude scattered throughout the district; and several arms of the sea advance into the western shore of the county.

Inverness-shire comprehends twenty-four complete parishes, and thirteen parts of parishes. The county is singularly destitute of towns—the only one it possesses being INVERNESS, which is a Royal Burgh; it joins with Fortrose (in Ross-shire), Nairn (in the county of its name), and Forres (in Morayshire), in sending a member to parliament; and the county of Inverness returns another representative. The eminences of greatest altitude in this county, with their height above the level of the sea, are—Ben Nevis 4,370 feet, Mealfourvonie 3,600, Scarsough 3,412, and Craig-Phadrig 1,150.

 (e) A part of Croy parish is in Nairnshire; the whole contains 1,664 inhabitants.
 (f) A small part of Daviot and Dunlitchy parishes is likewise in Nairnshire; the entire contains 1,788 inhabitants.
 (g) Duthil parish, with the exception of Rothiemurchus township, is in Elginshire; the entire contains 1,893 inhabitants.
 (h) Rather more than half the population of Kilmalie parish are in Argyreshire; the whole contains 5,566 inhabitants.
 (i) Kincardine parish is mostly in Ross-shire, where the whole is entered.
 (j) A small part of the united parishes of Moy and Dalrossie is in Nairnshire; the entire contains 1,089 inhabitants.
 (k) A small part of Petty parish is also in the county of Nairn; the whole contains 1,826 inhabitants.
 (l) Small Isles parish is mostly in Argyreshire; the entire contains 1,457 inhabitants.
 (m) Only a very small part of Urray parish is in this county; the remainder is in Ross-shire, where the whole is entered.

† The increase in the parishes of Abernethy, Boleskine and Abertarf, and Calder, in thirty years, cannot be here stated, as no returns appear for those parishes in the census taken for 1801. The population of these parishes in 1831 should be added to the total increase, in order to make the columns for 1801 and 1831 agree.

The total annual value of Real Property, in this county, as assessed in April, 1815, amounted to £185,565.

BEAULY AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

BEAULY is a village in the extensive parish of Kilmorack; 35 miles s. w. of Tain, 12 w. of Inverness, and 9 s. of Dingwall, standing on the south side of the river of the same name as it pours into Loch Beauly, an inner branch of the Moray Frith. The situation of this place is beautiful, from the windings and falls of the river, and general appearance of the surrounding country—and thence its name, Beau-lieu, that is, 'fine place.' Lately a small harbour has been formed here, to which vessels of one hundred and fifty tons burden can come at high water. The exports chiefly consist of timber, grain and wool; the imports, coal (from England) and lime. Verging upon the extremity of the frith stand the ruins of the priory founded in the early part of the thirteenth century, and peopled by monks from France, who gave the place the name it still retains; the venerable remains form an object of curiosity, blended with interest, to the tourist; but the falls of Kilmorack are pre-eminent in attraction, and present a scene of great natural beauty. The banks of the river are bold and rocky, and in the course of its windings it divides in such a way as to form the fascinating island of Aighash. There is excellent salmon fishing in the Beauly; and at the falls a number are caught occasionally by their leaping on the dry banks, in their efforts to surmount the cataract. It is recorded that the late Lord Lovat, noticing the frequency of this mistake of that fish, once performed a curious experiment here: he made a fire on the brink of the river, and placed on it a large pot filled with water; speedily a salmon, making a leap in a wrong direction, tumbled into the pot, where it was soon boiled, and eaten by his lordship and his attendants: this was done that he might boast in the south of the wonders that existed in the Highlands (which were then but little known), and to say that in his country provisions were so abundant that, if a fire were made and a pot set on it to boil, on the bank of a river, the salmon would of themselves leap into the pot to be boiled. Two miles further, to the westward of the falls, may be contemplated the splendid scenery of the valley of the Dhiurim, allowed to surpass any other view in Scotland. Fairs for cattle are held on the Muir of Ord, from the month of April to November, both inclusive; they generally occur on the second or third Wednesday of each month, but are regulated by the Falkirk trysts; the 'Edinburgh Almanac,' however, must be consulted with respect to the precise days on which they take place.

CAMPBELTOWN

IS a village in the parish of Ardersier, 31 miles w. of Elgin, 19 w. of Forres, 12 n. of Inverness, 8 w. of Nairn, and about a mile from Fort George; situate on the coast of a picturesque bay, and at the foot of an eminence called Cromwell's mount, on the summit of which are the remains of a fortification, and, behind, the view is very extensive, embracing parts of eight or nine counties. This place, which originated only from the residence of those connected with the garrison, is now a village of some pretensions, contains a population of eight hundred inhabitants, and possesses many facilities of improvement: has a strong chalybeate spring, which is much frequented by invalids; and it is peculiarly well adapted as a bathing quarter. The inhabitants support a public library, and there are two friendly societies, one of which is called 'His Majesty's Friendly Pension Society.' A court sits here on the first Monday in every month, for the recovery of small debts; and a fair is held annually, on the 12th of August. The parish church stands at the bottom of the bay. There are several respectable public houses, of which the principal is the Commercial Inn, situate in the main street.

FORT GEORGE, about a mile from Campbeltown, was erected immediately after the year 1746, at an expense of £160,000, in order to keep the highlands in check. It covers fifteen acres of a level point, projecting into the Moray Frith, the ramparts, on three sides, rising almost out of the sea; it is said to be one of the most regular fortifications in Britain, is mounted by eighty cannons, on four bastions, and completely commands the entrance into the harbour of Inverness. The present garrison, which as a work of offence or defence, is now happily useless, consists of a few artillerymen, and a dépôt of about two hundred men. A small pier projects from the fort into the sea, for the use of the ferry boats, which here communicate with the opposite coast of Ross-shire.

POST OFFICE, Main-street, Robert Tulloch, Post Master.—Letters from EDINBURGH, ABERDEEN, &c. arrive every evening at six, and are despatched every evening at seven.—Letters from INVERNESS, &c. arrive every evening at seven, and are despatched every evening at six.

FORT WILLIAM,

BALACHELISH NORTH, CORRAN-FERRY, CORPACH AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

FORT WILLIAM (formerly called Maryburgh and Gordonsburgh) is a town and sea-port, on the eastern shore and near the top of Loch Linnhe, in the parish of Kilmalle; 133 miles n. w. of Edinburgh, 106 n. w. of Glasgow, 65 s. w. of Inverness; 40 n. e. of Oban, and 30 s. w. of Fort Augustus. The chief branches of business are agriculture and fishing; and it is a place of general resort for the tourist and the traveller in the summer months; for the accommodation of such visitors there are two excellent inns and posting-houses; at this season there likewise is a conveyance to Liverpool, by steam-boat, once a fortnight—and a communication is kept up with Glasgow and Inverness, by the same mode, three times a week throughout the year. A very substantial stone quay was erected here in 1834, by the society for promoting the British fisheries and by subscription, at an expense of about £1,500. The town consists of one tolerably regular-built street, nearly half a mile in length, and containing some good buildings, the most superior of which, however, is eclipsed in elegance by an edifice belonging to the Messrs. Ainslie, completed in 1836, opposite the Caledonian Hotel. Fort William is governed by a bailie, who is appointed by Sir Duncan Cameron, Bart., of Fassfern and Callart, proprietor of the place; and by the reform act it is appointed one of the stations for taking the votes of the county electors. The sheriff substitute holds a court here once a week, during the session at Inverness. A branch of the National Banking Company, and one of the British Linen Company, furnish facilities to commercial transactions; while the industrious economical tradesman, and the humble frugal peasant, have also a bank for their well-earned savings. The town supports a subscription library and a well-conducted parochial school. The places of worship are a church of the establishment, erected in 1790; an episcopal chapel, built in 1817; and a Roman catholic chapel, constructed in 1792. The fort, from which the town derives its modern name, 'Fort William,' is a little distance north-east of the town, and was first founded in 1655, during the protectorate of Cromwell, by the advice and under the direction of Gen. Monk; no part of what was then built is now standing, but the old barrack (some time condemned, and expected to be soon pulled down,) was erected in 1692: there are at present twelve 12-pounders and four 6-pounders mounted, and kept in good order; the resident officers are a master gunner, fort-marshal, and barrack-serjeant; and the garrison generally consists of an officer and eighteen men. In the river Lochy, to the north-east of the town, is a long established and sometimes very productive salmon fishery, the principal part of the produce of which is sent to London, Edinburgh and Glasgow. A mile and a half north-east from Fort William, not far from Ben Nevis distillery, is Inverlochy Castle, said to have been founded anterior to the Christian era: tradition may err in this particular, but it was certainly rebuilt, on its present extensive site, by an order from the Scotch government, in the reign of Edward I of England, by one of the Cummin family, the western tower being still called Cummin's tower. It consists of four large round towers, thirty feet high, connected by a wall, or screen, twenty feet high and ten feet thick, forming a quadrangle of large dimensions; the wall is in a fair state of preservation, but the towers are much decayed; and in 1835 the proprietor, the Marquess of Huntly, with judicious taste inclosed the whole structure at a considerable expense. The most sublime object in this district, and one which attracts a crowd of visitors hither in the summer, is the majestic Ben Nevis, more particularly noticed at page 483: the ascent to the summit is difficult, and even perilous; but should the intrepid adventurer be so fortunate as to attain the topmost region on a fine cloudless day, the contemplation of the almost boundless expanse of prospect, spread out far beneath his aerial position, will amply compensate him for his toil and perseverance. The whole country, indeed, between Fort William and Glasgow, is perhaps unequalled in Europe for variety of scenery. Fairs are held on the second Wednesday in June and November, for cattle; the great wool and sheep market takes place on the first Tuesday after the second Thursday in July. The population of the town, in 1836, was 1,116.

BALACHELISH NORTH is situate on the north shore of Loch Leven, about twelve miles south of Fort William; it has a small neat parliamentary church, and an excellent parochial school. Some distance eastward from the church is a slate-quarry, wrought by Mr. John M'Innes; this slate is chiefly used in the operation of draining. Not far from the quarry is found valuable limestone, its product possessing superior adhesive qualities; and an extensive limekiln has lately been erected by Mr. Even Cameron. About five miles east, near the margin of Loch Leven, is Callart, the elegant and recently-erected mansion of Sir Duncan Cameron, of Fassfern and Callart; and on the south shore, opposite to Callart, near the entrance of one of the most romantic glens in Scotland, is Glencoe, the property and residence of Ewen Macdonald, Esq., of Glencoe. Balachelish North is united with CORRAN-FERRY NORTH (in Argyleshire), on the opposite side of Loch Linnhe, into one ecclesiastical parish; the latter is about three miles west from the former, and nine south from Fort William; it has a parliamentary church (at which the Rev. John M'Millan officiates, as well as at Balachelish North), and a good inn. About a mile west, not far from the border of Loch Linnhe, is Ardour House, the respectable mansion and family residence of Colonel Maclean, of Ardour, surrounded with fine plantations, at the foot of the Ardour hills.

CORPACH is a widely spread, but not very populous village, on the north shore of Loch Eil (in the county of Argyle, but in the same parish as Fort William), three miles north of the Fort: though this village is in Argyleshire, the principal part of the parish of Kilmalie, in which it is situate, is in the county of Inverness, and is surrounded by that county and Loch Eil. Corpach is chiefly to be noticed as being the southern commencement of that great national undertaking, the Caledonian Canal, which here enters Loch Eil by four locks; a little above are eight others, called 'Neptune's staircase'; they are capable of admitting vessels of three hundred tons (not drawing above twelve feet water), and each lock rises eight feet; Mr. Alexander Clark is superintendent and collector of dues. Kilmalie parish church is situate about half a mile from the end of the canal, at Corpach; it was erected in 1784. Near the church stands a pyramidal obelisk, of considerable height, with a large tablet of white marble at its base, raised to the memory of Colonel John Cameron, who was slain at the battle of Waterloo, in 1815, while commanding the 92d Highlanders. The road through Corpach leads to the district of Arisaig, about forty miles distant, and Moidart and Loch Sheil. At Borradaie, in Moidart, Prince Charles Stuart landed on the 25th of July, 1745: he sailed up Loch Shiel on the 18th August; the following day he landed and entered Glenfinnan, where he was met by Cameron of Loch Eil, and Macdonald of Keppoch, with their clansmen: commemorative of this circumstance, Macdonald of Glenalladale has erected a monument.

GRANTOWN AND CROMDALE.

GRANTOWN is a neat modern village in the parish of Cromdale, which latter lies nearly equal in this county and in that of Moray; Grantown being situate in that district of the parish called Inverallen, on the north bank of the river Spey, rather more than a mile south from Castle Grant, one of the seats of the Earl of Seafield; and at the distance of 35 miles s. e. of Inverness, 24 s. of Forres, 8 n. e. of Duthill, and 6 n. of Abernethy. Grantown was begun about the year 1774, under the patronage of the Grant family, who have been its continued benefactors; and many of that respectable family and name have residences in the neighbourhood. The trade of the place is of a local and domestic character, and there is a fair proportion of the ordinary useful shops and businesses which are to be found in a small country town. A branch of the National Bank is settled in the village, and there are two distilleries in its vicinity. Besides the church of the parish there is another in Grantown, and there are two schools, one parochial, the other supported by funds bequeathed by Lady Grant, of Moneynusk, for the education of fifteen children of each sex, orphans, between the ages of seven and fourteen years. The village is governed by a baron bailie; and a justice of peace court sits once a month. There are four cattle fairs held in the year.

INVERNESS

THE capital of the large county of the same name, is 156 miles n.n.w. of Edinburgh, 103 w. by n. of Aberdeen, 162 n. of Glasgow, 125 n.w. of Dundee, 134 s. of Thurso, and 27 w. by s. of Forres; situate upon the northern extremity of the Great Glen of Scotland, and upon the banks of the Ness (near the confluence of that river with the sea), about a mile from the northern entry of the Caledonian Canal. 'Inverness,' says Dr. Johnson, 'may be properly styled the capital of the Highlands; and it is so usually esteemed. We learn from Richards' 'Itinerary' (one of the oldest documents extant relative to the affairs of Great Britain, and referring to the period between A. d. 138 and 170), that Inverness was one of the ten cities of Britain enjoying the Jus Latinitalis; only two others in Scotland are mentioned, Perth and Dumbarton. After the Romans withdrew, Inverness became the seat of the Pictish monarchy. Here Macbeth, the great lord of Ross and Moray, had a castle, which Boethius, and after him Shakspeare, assigns as the scene of King Duncan's murder; Buchanan's relation is to the same effect: this castle, says the poet,

— hath a pleasant seat; the air
 Nimbly and sweetly reoomends itself Unto our gentle senses.

Upon or near to the site of this castle, a royal castle or fort was afterwards erected, which was in existence until 1746, when it was blown up during the rebellion; a new casile (which will be hereafter noticed) now occupies the site of the old one.

The situation of Inverness is so singularly beautiful as to have compelled a recognition of its claims to that character, even amid the dry technical details of its great charter; 'its good and pleasant situation' is there noticed as one of the reasons for its endowment as a royal burgh. The eminent lexicographer before cited, in speaking of Inverness, adds—'the language of this town has been long considered as peculiarly elegant; a fact which he ascribes to the intermixture of Cromwell's soldiers with the inhabitants: this is a fanciful hypothesis in many ways, and at once appears hardly reconcilable with the fact that the Gaelic continues to be the prevailing language still spoken by the common people; the soldiers must have learned the one when they taught the other. The greater part of the town lies on the eastern bank of the Ness—here a broad, clear and equably flowing stream. The streets are well paved, provided with common sewers, and during the winter months suitably lighted with gas. In the summer months, Inverness is much frequented by tourists and sportsmen from the south, to much the greater number of whom it forms the northern limit of their excursions. Being the centre to which the principal lines of road in the Highlands converge—having the Caledonian Canal on the one hand, and the Moray Firth on the other—it maintains a rapid, frequent and easy intercourse, both by land and water, with all parts of the kingdom. The objects of interest in the neighbourhood are varied and numerous; and its inns are noted by every visiter, not only for comfort but for elegance. The environs of Inverness combine picturesque beauty in detail with magnificence as a whole—'uniting,' says a late tourist, 'two opposite qualities, and each in the greatest perfection—the characters of a rich open lowland country with those of the wildest alpine scenery; both being also close at hand, and in many places intermixed; while to all this is added a series of maritime views not often excelled.' The walks near the town are deserving of a stranger's perambulation; whether along the banks of the river to the wooded islands of the Ness (with which there is communication by handsome wire tension bridges), or along the sea-shore, or by the margin of the canal; or to the singularly shaped hill of Tomnahurich, or 'hill of the fairies;' or to the summit of Craig Phadric (the viti-fications of which afford matter of speculation to the antiquarian), or to the druidical circles in the 'Leys;' in each and all of these directions there is much to please and interest the man of taste or of science.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND WORKS.—Pre-eminent among these, as much for its own architectural beauty as for its commanding position, is the CASTLE of INVERNESS, erected on the site of the old royal castle. The modern edifice was recently built for the accommodation of the courts of justice in the northern circuit, and for the preservation of the records and transactions of the judicial business of the county; it is built from a design of Mr. Burn, architect, Edinburgh, after the old English castellated style, and harmonizes well, from its varied projecting and receding masses, its square and round towers, with the waving outline of the surrounding scenery; it contains a splendid court-room, a commodious county hall, and various suitable apartments for judicial business and the convenience of the different functionaries connected therewith. The other public buildings of this place are:—The Gaol (surmounted by a handsome spire), in Bridge-street; the Town Hall, in High-street; the Northern Meeting Assembly-rooms, in Church-street; the Northern Infirmary, a large well-constructed building, with an imposing exterior, a little way out of the town, on the bank of the river; the Academy, a liberally endowed institution, with a museum, in Academy-street; the United-Charities Building, and the Observatory, above View-place; Raining's School, a prosperous and useful seminary, on School-hill; the Central School, in Green of Muirtown, established by the society for educating the poor in the Highlands; the High Church (with a spire), and the Gaelic Church, in Church-street; the East Church, in Academy-street; the Chapel of Ease, the Episcopalian Chapel, and Chapels for Seceders, Independents, Methodists, and Roman Catholics—the latter place of worship is of recent erection, and is a beautiful structure. The Bank of Scotland, the British Linen Company, the Commercial Bank, and the National Bank, have each an establishment at Inverness. Among the public works may be enumerated—the Old or Stone Bridge over the Ness, finished in 1688, a handsome erection of seven arches, more elliptical in form than was common at that period; the Timber Bridge, erected in 1808; the Gas and Water Works, in which a large capital is invested, now yielding a profitable return; the Quays or Harbours formed at different times near the mouth of the river: at these quays, and also at the Caledonian Canal wharfs, within a mile of the town, vessels of considerable tonnage may receive or discharge their cargoes; while large ships have excellent anchorage in Kessock Roads, just above the confluence of the river with the sea.

COMMERCE, TRADE AND MANUFACTURES.—There are registered, at the custom-house of Inverness, 161 vessels, of the burthen of 7,633 tons, navigated by 633 men; of these, about 40 vessels, tonnage 3,800, belong to owners of whom the greater number reside in Inverness. The trade between Inverness (including some small adjacent ports) and London employs one large steam-ship and four sailing-vessels; between Inverness and Leith, one steam-ship and three sailing-vessels; between Inverness and Aberdeen, two sailing-vessels; and between Inverness and Glasgow there are four steamers, plying through the Caledonian Canal. The exports from this place are chiefly grain, wool, timber, salmon, hemp, cloth, &c. &c.; the imports are considerable in hardware, haberdashery, iron, wine, groceries, coal, lime, &c.: the foreign annual imports to Inverness consist of from 400 to 600 tons of hemp, and three or four cargoes of timber and Archangel tar. Ship-building has of late been commenced here, and is carried on with great spirit; there has been long established an extensive manufactory of hempen cloth, which is principally exported to London, and for the East and West Indies; there is likewise a progressively thriving manufactory of woollen cloths, tartans, and carpeting; three or four breweries produce considerable quantities of beer and ale, chiefly for the home demand; and there are several distilleries in the neighbourhood. The shops in Inverness are well supplied with goods of every description; and are resorted to, not only by the inhabitants of the town and its vicinage, but also by those of the remoter vales of the shire, and by many from the contiguous counties.

Inverness is a royal burgh of great antiquity, having, it is said, received a charter in 1067 from Malcolm Canmore; and there are on record four charters in its favour from King William the Lion, besides various subsequent ones by several of his successors. The great charter of the town, however, was conferred by James VI, in 1591. The municipal government is vested in a provost, four bailies, a dean of guild, treasurer, and fourteen councillors, in all twenty-one; considerable charitable funds are under their management. The burgh, in conjunction with those of Nairn, Forres and Fortrose, returns a member to parliament. Being the seat of the sheriff of the county, the courts of that functionary are held here at stated periods; and a justice of peace court, for small debts, sits on the first Wednesday of every month. This town is the appointed seat of a society for the education of the poor in the Highlands, of the Medical Society of the North, of the Inverness-shire Farming Society, and of the Northern Institution, whose place of meeting is before noticed: this latter body is composed of a considerable number of noblemen and gentlemen in the northern counties, associated for purposes of local utility; horse-races take place under their auspices, and their meeting generally induces the temporary residence of the fashionables of the district. Three weekly newspapers are published here—the 'Inverness Courier,' on Wednesday; the 'Inverness Herald,' on Thursday; and the 'Inverness Journal,' on Friday.

We shall now extract, with a few alterations, from 'Anderson's Guide to the Highlands' (an able, scientific, and well-got-up work), the following list of objects, in and about Inverness, worthy of being visited by the stranger:—

KINGUSSIE AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

KINGUSSIE, the gaelic name of which is the termination of the 'Pine Forest,' is the name of a parish and a beautiful village, 44 miles s. of Inverness, and 75 N. of Perth, on the great road between the two towns; and 50 miles N. E. of Fort William, where the Caledonian canal joins the Atlantic ocean.
The commissioners of roads and bridges, in prosecution of their liberality towards the Highlands of Scotland, opened lately a beautiful new line of road, from Kingussie to Fort William, by Loch Laggan, though part of the remains of the ancient Caledonian forest, and in sight of the famed parallel roads in Glenroy.
A more romantic route for the traveller than this by Loch Laggan is rare to be seen. The Maquess of Abercorn is building a costly and splendid shooting establishment on the banks of the lake, where the Duke and Dutchess of Bedford often visit.

Kingussie is romantically situate on the north bank of the Spey, not far from the north base of those hills on which Norval's father 'fed his flock,' in sight of Cairn-Gorm, famous for its transparent stones, and Soul-Beira-muchdugh, the highest mountain in the British empire. The village contains a small gaol, in which the justices of peace courts for the district of Badenoch are held monthly. There are three burial grounds in the place, two of which are known to be of great antiquity, the walls of the places of worship being still visible: one of the cemeteries is named after St. Columbus, and is said to have been originally dedicated to that holy personage. The present church, which is new, commodious and handsome, is on a hill, at the east-end of the village, in a situation which is not to be surpassed for beauty. On the south bank of the river, opposite the village, stand the ruins of Ruthven

Castle, which was a barrack in the reign of George II, and burnt down in 1745. It was a place of great antiquity and note, having been the residence and castle of Walter Cumming, Lord of Badenoch, and his ancestors, who, at one period, lorded over almost all the Highlands of Scotland. Walter Cumming's oppression and tyranny became so intolerable to all within his power, which was very extended, that the Clan Chattan (M'Phersons) threw off the yoke, and expelled the tyrant from the country; for which deed of valour they acquired the red hand and dagger in addition to their coat of arms. Ruthven Castle was the rallying point of those brave but deluded heroes of 1745-6, where they assembled after the battle of Culloden, in considerable strength and high spirits, eager and anxious to be again led against the Duke of Cumberland. Balls and merriment were kept up by the officers and men for several nights, while expresses were despatched in quest of the Prince, who was found wandering in the mountains, and making for the Hebrides, sunk in spirits and in deep despair, returning the answer to his faithful adherents that 'all was over with him.' Their loss at Culloden was nothing compared to the depression this caused to their spirits by disappointment. From that moment they dispersed, broken hearted, to meet no more. Three miles east of the village is Belville House, built by James M'Pherson, Esq. translator of Ossian's poems, &c. Near to the house and road side is a neat monument, to the memory of the 'bard of Morvein;' and half way between it and the village, a little off the road, is to be seen a cave of great antiquity and curiosity, well worth the stranger's notice. Eight miles south-west of Kingussie, on the Fort William road, stands Cluny Castle, the seat of Evan M'Pherson, Esq. the chief of Clan Chattan. Close to the Spey, eight miles east, the remains of the late Dutchess of Gordon are buried, where there is a beautiful monument to her memory, in her favourite haunt, the romantic Vale of Kenrara. Five miles south-west from the village, close to the Perth road, is Invermahaven moor, celebrated for a hard-fought battle between the clans Mackintosh and Cameron, and in which Cluny and the M'Phersons ultimately interfered; the consequence of which gave occasion, sixteen years afterwards, for the bloody contest between thirty M'Phersons and the same number of Davidsons, on the North Inch of Perth, in presence of King Robert III of Scotland and his court, from which eleven of the former, and only one of the latter returned alive, and all seriously wounded. Partial notice of this memorable event is to be found in Sir Walter Scott's 'Fair Maid of Perth.' The district in which this village is situated is nearly in the centre of the Highlands of Scotland, where the genuine race of the Gael and their original language is to be found as pure as anywhere. The inhabitants, in time of war, are fond of military life, preferring entering Highland regiments, the 42nd and 92nd in particular; for one reason, perhaps, that popular nobleman, the late Duke of Gordon, having been colonel of these corps for many years. The hills of Badenoch are no where surpassed for the abundance of all sorts of game to be found amongst them, which brings a great number of noblemen and gentlemen to the country during the shooting season. The Duke of Bedford's summer residence is the Down, in the beautiful and romantic valley of Rothiemurchus, 10 miles east of Kingussie. John Leslie, the celebrated Bishop of Ross, in Scotland, was a natural son of the parson of Kingussie, in Badenoch, and born there in 1527. He had his education in the university of Aberdeen, and in 1547 was made canon of the cathedral. He was the principal opponent of John Knox. There are in the village five fairs in the year, viz. in February, May, June, August and November, besides cattle fairs in May, August and September.

PORTREE IN SKYE,

WITH THE ISLANDS OF EIGG, RAASAY, RONA, &c.

PORTREE, a sea-port and post village in the parish of its name, is the principal place in Skye and the adjacent isles; it is situate 113 miles w. from Inverness, 110 n.w. from Oban, 80 n. from Tobermory, 28 E. from Dunvegan, and 25 N.W. from Broadford. It contains a parish church (erected in 1821-2), a parochial school, a jail, a branch of the National Bank of Scotland, and a good and commodious inn. The village is seated a little above the shore, on the top of a steep ascent, thickly planted with young thriving trees. The quay, erected about 1819, has not much depth at low water, but the tide rises from twelve to sixteen feet: the bay is safe and spacious, having a depth of from five to twelve fathoms, and the anchorage is excellent. On a high rocky promontory, projecting some distance into the bay, at whose base the quay is erected, stands an octagonal tower, built in 1834, from which there is a splendid view of the surrounding scenery. On the west of the village, amidst some thriving plantations, stands the house of J. A. Maxwell, Esq. the agent of Lord Macdonald; and on the south side of the bay, at a distance of nearly three miles, is the residence of the sheriff substitute, G. Robertson, Esq. (who holds a court here once a week during session), and the manse of Portree. The votes of the county electors in Skye, for a member of parliament for Inverness-shire, are taken at Broadford. The chief exports are sheep, black cattle, wool, kelp, salt herrings, salmon (pickled chiefly for London), and cod and ling, both salt and dry, principally for Glasgow and Liverpool. The population of Portree village, in 1836, was about 500.

SKYE is an extensive island on the western coast of Scotland, forming no inconsiderable portion of the county of Inverness, being the largest of the western isles with the exception of Lewis. It is 46 miles from north to south, and 27 from east to west, in a direct line; but the parliamentary road, commencing at Armadale in the south, and running chiefly on the eastern coast to Uigg, in the north, is 72 miles long; and there is a cross road extending 9 miles still further in the latter direction. The eastern part of the island is separated from Glenelg, on the main land, by a narrow sound, called the Kyles of Skye. The island is chiefly the property of Lord Macdonald, and of Macleod of Macleod; and is principally occupied in large grazing farms of six or seven miles in extent, producing great numbers of sheep and black cattle, and some small horses. Formerly great quantities of kelp were made here. The general face of the country is mountainous, which, although it may be inviting to the tourist from the sublime scenery it presents, is a great barrier to the successful operations of the husbandman; and the island cannot be called fertile, if we except the narrow stripes of land in the valleys, and some parts near the coast. The fisheries on this coast, especially in the sounds between Skye and the main land, are sometimes very productive. The coasts are indented with many fine and secure ports, the principal of which are Portree and Broadford on the east, the Isle Oransay on the south, and Dunvegan and Steirs on the north. The peculiar feature of Skye is its splendid and very romantic scenery, which is seldom equalled for abrupt boldness and originality of form. A particular notice of all the places worthy of a stranger's visit would occupy more space than we could devote to the subject: we cannot, however, omit noticing the small lake of Cornishk, about ten miles south-west from Broadford, whose sides rise almost perpendicularly from its deep black waters to a great height; also a spar cave, on the coast of Strathard, and about seven miles north of Broadford and Storr, is exhibited one of the most grand and imposing scenes in Scotland: this is a mountain seven miles north of Portree, whose summit is full two thousand feet above the level of the sea, the eastern side being a grand precipice of bare rugged rock, often rising perpendicularly five hundred feet; but the most remarkable feature about it, and which renders it dissimilar to any other mountain, are several detached pyramids, or almost perpendicular columns of rock, varying from three hundred to near five hundred feet in height; some standing at a considerable distance from the mountain, and appearing as though the intermediate parts, being too soft to resist the influences that acted upon them, had crumbled away, leaving the harder materials as a monument of their ability to resist the ravages of time and the ragings of the tempest. One of these isolated spiral masses of rock rises one hundred and sixty-five feet from the base, and is two hundred and forty feet in circumference: it seems, at a distance, to stand upon an apex, from which one might imagine it would be easy to remove it; indeed, the spectator cannot divest himself of the apprehension that it would fall upon him should he approach too near. The scene is altogether grand and imposing, and must be visited to be appreciated. The fairs in Skye are held as follow:—at Portree, on the last Tuesdays in May and July, and the third Tuesday in November, for black cattle, horses, &c.; at Broadford, on the Thursdays after the Portree May and July fairs; at Fairbridge, on the second Tuesday in November; and at Sligichan, on the third Tuesday in September, for horses and black cattle.

EIGG, or Egg, is a small island in the Hebrides, belonging to Inverness-shire, about 12 miles s. w. of the promontory of Sleate, the most southern point of Skye. It is about three miles long from north to south, surmounted on the southern extremity by a perpendicular wall or rampart, called the Scur of Eigg, composed of pitchstone porphyry columns, running about a mile in length nearly east and west, from 300 to 400 feet broad, and from 350 to 400 feet high, the summit being about 1,340 feet above the level of the sea. The Scur is distinctly columnar, the pillars generally being about a foot in diameter; though there is a stratum of columns at the east end, inclining towards the horizon, whose diameters are from two and a half to three feet. The appearance of this singularly grand production of nature from every point is indescribably magnificent, and, when viewed from the east end, assumes the form of a stupendous ruined tower. At the base of the rocks, on the north and south sides, several large caves have been formed, by the softer parts of the rocks crumbling away; the bases of the columns above form the ceiling of these caves, and, as in Staffa, present a resemblance to the surface of honeycombs. Two steam boats pass here on their way to Portree, and return every week in summer.

RAASAY, or Razay, is an island of the Hebrides, belonging to the parish of Portree, about thirteen miles long and two broad, situate to the east of Skye, opposite to Portree, separated from it by the sound of Raasay, about four miles wide. It is the property of Macleod of Raasay, who has a fine mansion in a bay near the south-western extremity of the island. There are other islands in the neighbourhood of Skye, as Scalpa to the east, Rum and Canna to the south-west, &c.

RONA, or Ronay, is an island of the Hebrides, lying at the northern extremity of Raasay, from which it is separated by a strait, just passable for vessels. It is about four miles in length by one in breadth. The little arable ground which occurs in Rona, surrounds the scattered village that lies at the bottom of a bay, which contains nearly, if not, all the population of the island.

KINCARDINESHIRE,

OCCASIONALLY called the MEARNS, is a small county on the eastern coast of North Britain, bounded on the north and north-west by Aberdeenshire, on the east by the North Sea, and on the south and south-west by Forfarshire. Its form describes nearly that of a triangle, having to the sea its principal or most extensive base, and which reaches along the coast from the bay of Aberdeen to the mouth of the North Esk river, about thirty miles—its greatest breadth, inland, being twenty-four. The contents of the area, according to Mr. Gardiner, who surveyed the county for a map, were 243,444 English acres, of which 74,849 were in actual cultivation, 27,816 improvable by tillage, 17,609 woodland, and 123,170 mountains, &c. The phrase, Mearns, before referred to, after strict investigation, seems only properly applicable to the champagne and more populous district of the county, part of which is called the 'Howe of the Mearns,' from its being sunk between a large branch of the Grampian Hills on the one side, and a more gentle swelling on the other: it is properly, however, a continuation of the great valley of Strathmore, a tract extending, in a south-west direction, for nearly forty miles. Mearns, in all probability, is a word of local meaning; but it is generally said to have been affixed to this part of Scotland from its having become the property of Mernia, a brother of King Kenneth II, another brother, called Angus, conferring his name upon the neighbouring county of Forfar. This county has figured but little in history, and has never been the scene of any great military achievements; its peasantry, however, have always been considered a very industrious and able race of men. The shire takes its name from Kincardine, formerly a small town in the parish of Fordoun, and which was the seat of the county courts, &c. until the year 1600, when they were removed to Stonehaven. Kincardine, which has dwindled into a mere hamlet, was formerly connected with an ancient seat of royalty, called Kincardine Castle, of which only the foundations of the walls can now be traced. The name, in Gaelic, signifies 'the clan of friends;' and the appellation is applied to several parishes and towns throughout Scotland, though it does not designate any parish in this county.

SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—The county is now almost exclusively of an agricultural character, for although it has the advantage of so extensive a range of sea coast, it possesses no harbour of any commercial importance; neither have manufactures made much progress in the district. The coast is partly flat and partly rocky, and at the north-eastern corner of the county terminates the chain of the Grampians, where they form what is called the Girdle Ness, which presents to the sea a bold face of rock from sixty to eighty feet high. The soil of Kincardine is of a very productive kind, and is cultivated in a style nowhere surpassed in Scotland; a sufficient proof of this is the fact, that of all the lands in tillage nearly a seventh part is devoted to the culture of the turnip. This county is destitute of both coal and marl, and there is very little limestone—all of which deficiencies bear hard upon agricultural improvement; these drawbacks, however, seem to have excited more strongly the spirit of enterprise amongst the agriculturists, who import lime in great quantities from other districts by means of the Frith of Forth. The limestone of the county obtained near the coast is burnt with coal; in the more inland parts with peat or wood; but from the scarcity of fuel (no seams of coal being worked from Fife or Sunderland), there is much more lime imported into than is wrought in the shire. In Arbuthnot parish, and near St. Cyrus on the sea-shore, beautiful pebbles and jaspers are found. The county, in its more level parts, is highly embellished by the country seats of its numerous resident proprietors, each amid its own thriving woodland.

RIVERS and MOUNTAINS.—The most considerable rivers connected with this county are the DEE, the NORTH ESK, the COWIE, the BERVIE, and the CARRON. The Dee glides for eight or ten miles through the northern limb of the shire; the North Esk is a boundary river on the south-west, for about ten miles; the Cowie has a course of ten miles through the county, previous to its falling into the sea at Stonehaven, where also the Carron empties itself; and the Bervie, after a progress of sixteen miles, discharges itself into the sea at the town to which it imparts its name. The Luther water can only be mentioned as a tributary stream to the North Esk. The chief MOUNTAINS and eminences are—Mount Battoch, 3,465 feet in height; Clacknabane, 2,370; Cairniemount, 2,000; Kerloch, 1,890; the Hill of Fare, from 1,500 to 1,700; Scolty Hill, 1,500; and Strathfenella, a detached Grampian, from 1,200 to 1,500, above the level of the sea.

Kincardineshire comprises eighteen complete parishes, and three parts of parishes; a royal burgh, BERVIE, and a burgh of barony, Stonehaven, besides several smaller towns and villages. The county returns one member to parliament; and its royal burgh, in conjunction with Montrose, Arbroath, Brechin, and Forfar, sends another representative.

AUCHINBLAE AND FORDOUN.

AUCHINBLAE is a thriving modern village, in the parish of Fordoun, 26 miles s. by w. of Aberdeen, 15 n. of Montrose, 11 s. w. of Stonehaven, 6 from Fettercairn, and 5 from Lawrencekirk; eligibly situated on the banks of the Luther water, on the high road between Brechin and Aberdeen. It contains an extensive mill for the spinning of flax, and manufacturing linen cloth by the power-loom, in which establishment, and also in hand-loom weaving, the greater proportion of the industrious classes here find employment. In the western part of the parish, about a mile north-east from Fettercairn, is a small assemblage of tenements, being all that exists of the former county town, Kincardine; and among these buildings, or in their vicinity, stood the court house. It ceased to be the chief town in the reign of James VI, when Stonehaven, as a more convenient situation for holding the county courts, obtained that distinction. In the vicinity are the remains of a castle, formerly a royal residence, having been the principal palace of Kenneth III, and that from which he was inveigled to be murdered by Fenella, as noticed under Fettercairn. From the foundations of some of the walls, which is all that can be traced of the building, it is supposed to have been a vast quadrangular edifice. Near Drumtouchy Castle, in the neighbourhood, is a fine spring, considered to be among the most copious flowing in Scotland; and not far from the mansion house of Fordoun are distinct vestiges of a Roman encampment. The parish extends from east to west ten miles, and in breadth about seven; the southern part is level, but the north is mountainous, having a thin soil, and inferior in fertility to the lower part. The present parish church is a modern edifice, substituted for one of great antiquity, which occupied the present site. A weekly market is held on Friday during the winter months, and there are two annual cattle fairs, in June and November.

BANCHORY-DAVENICK, WITH HILLSIDE,

MARYCULTER AND NIGG.

BANCHORY-DAVENICK lies partly in Kincardineshire, and partly in Aberdeenshire. It is situated on both sides of the river Dee, near its discharge into the ocean. The fishing village of Port Lethan is in this parish, also the small one of HILLSIDE.

MARYCULTER lies on the south side of the Dee, extending from that river to the Grampians; is of an oblong form, being six miles in length by two in breadth. The whole parish is rocky, and the surface of the land encumbered with large stones which are a great obstacle to agricultural improvements. The district is well wooded, and here and there are to be seen some thriving plantations.

BANCHORY-TERNAN, DURRIS, AND STRACHAN.

THE parish of BANCHORY-TERNAN lies on the banks of the Dee, further up that river than Banchory-Davenick; it is bounded by Strachan on the south, Durriss on the east, and Mid-Mar on the north. The village stands on the north side of the Dee, at a distance of 18 miles south-west from Aberdeen. It contains a good inn and posting house, the Douglas' Arms. The church is a handsome modern erection, and in different parts of the parish are three parochial schools, which also contains two or three small lakes; in one of these is an artificial island, with the ruins of an old mansion upon it.

DURRIS parish extends about eight miles in length, by five and a half in breadth. It lies on the south side of the Dee, from which the ground rises, and terminates in the ridge of the Grampian mountains. A great part of the parish has lately been enclosed, and considerable improvements are going on. The parish is bounded by Marycenter and Fetteresso on the east, and Strachan and Banchory-Ternan on the west; from the latter Durris is about six miles distant. There are several lofty mountains in this district.

BERVIE,

WITH THE PARISHES OF ARBUTHNOT, AND KINNEFF WITH CATTERLINE. BERVIE, (or INVERBERVIE as it is frequently written), a royal burgh and the capital of the parish of its name, and the chief town for many miles; is 13 miles N. by E. of Montrose, 10 s. of Stonehaven, and 25 s. of Aberdeen, eligibly situate on the coast road from the last named city to Dundee, and at the mouth of the Bervie, which river is crossed by a good bridge of a single arch spanning one hundred and three feet. At the mouth of the river is a small basin which opens into an extensive bay navigable for any vessel almost at any time. "This basin could easily be converted into a very commodious and safe harbour, which would be the means of augmenting the general commerce of the place and revive the fisheries on the coast. It is mentioned by some of the oldest inhabitants, that the city of Aberdeen aware of the advantages that would arise from a place so admirably adapted by nature for a harbour, but entirely neglected by art, made overtures to the council of this burgh some considerable time ago to construct a harbour at their own expense on certain conditions, but which were not acceded to. The principal trade of the town is the weaving of linen cloth and spinning linen; on the banks of the Bervie there are six mills employed in the latter operation, besides a meal mill. The trade derived from the import of lime and coal, and the curing of poik is of some consequence; and as a grain mart, Bervie is the most considerable in the county, upwards of thirty thousand quarters being annually disposed of at the weekly market here. There are five vessels belonging to the burgh trading from and to the port of Gourdon, (within the limits of the royalty). Bervie is admirably adapted for the purpose of manufactures to any extent; the river is a fine stream, and in the driest season it has always abundance of water; it runs through a large valley in which the first mill that was ever erected for spinning of flax in Scotland stands.

Bervie was constituted a royal burgh by charter from King David II, as a return for the kindness and hospitality with which he was received by the poor inhabitants, when he was forced in here by stress of weather; the place on which he landed is still called Craig David. James VI. renewed the charter, confirming all the privileges and immunities granted by David. The burgh is governed by a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, treasurer, and nine councillors—it joins with Montrose, Arbroath, Brechin and Forfar in returning a member to parliament. The places of worship are an established church and a chapel for independents. The former is a handsome edifice of modern erection in the gothic style of architecture, and is the principal ornament of the town. Besides the weekly market which is held on Wednesday, and as before mentioned is a large one for grain, there are five other markets or fairs held during the year for the engaging of servants, and the sale of black cattle.

ARBUTHNOT is of an irregular triangular form, nearly five miles in length, bounded on the west by Fordoun, or the great hollow of the Mearns, the streams Bervie and Forth forming this line of division, and on the north-east by Glenbervie and Kinneff. The celebrated Dr. Arbuthnot, the intimate friend of Pope and Swift, was the son of the minister and a native of this parish. Arbuthnot gives the title of viscount to an ancient family of the same name, which became distinguished in the twelfth century. Sir Robert Arbuthnot for loyalty to Charles I, was created a baron and viscount by that monarch.

KINNEFF, with which is incorporated the abrogated parish of Catterline, lies on the sea coast south from Dunnotar, and bounded by Arbuthnot on the west, and Bervie on the south. It extends from the water of Bervie to the northern point about five miles along the coast, which is exceedingly bold and rocky. Upon the margin of the sea, not above a hundred yards distance from the church, are to be seen the ruins of a castle from which it is supposed the parish has taken its name; and tradition assigns it as having been the residence of a Scottish monarch named Kenneth.

DRUMLITHIE

Is a village in the parish of Glenbervie, 18 miles N. of Montrose, 7 N. by W. from Bervie, and about 6 1/2 S. by W. of Stonehaven; situate nearly in the centre of the east side of the county, on the road from the last named town to Lawrencekirk. The inhabitants are principally employed in the weaving of linen, sheetings, &c. by the manufacturers of Aberdeen and Montrose. The parish of Glenbervie extends upwards of six miles in length by a breadth of three at some parts, and five at others. The soil in the upper part of the district is a blueish clay; in the lower a dry fertile loam. The northern part of the parish lies partly among the Grampian hills. The river Bervie bounds the district partly on the west and the Carron has its source within it: the hamlet of Glenbervie, which stands in the vicinity of the former river, is a barony of the Douglas family. There is an established church and parochial school at Glenbervie, and an episcopalian chapel at Drumlithie. A fair is held on the Thursday after the second Tuesday of October.

FETTERCAIRN

Is a village in the parish of its name, 98 miles N. by E. of Edinburgh, 15 S. of Montrose, 14 S. W. of Stonehaven, and 11 N. of Brechin, situate on a small streamlet, a tributary to the North Esk. The latter river is crossed by a romantic bridge called the 'Bridge of Gannachy,' which springs off a precipitous rock, at both extremities, and is elevated to a great height above the water. The name of the parish is derived from a stupendous cairn of stone in the neighbourhood, a mountain monument to the heroes who died in some unrecorded battle. A new road across the cairn is about to be commenced, which will shorten the distance very materially between the towns of Brechin and Huntly, and will open a new and convenient route to the picturesque scenery of the Aberdeenshire Highlands. The village possesses two excellent inns, and the like number of libraries, the one parochial, the other belonging to the Fettercairn

Farmer's Club; and in the immediate vicinity is a distillery, on a large scale. In the village square is the old cross of Kincardine, an erection of great antiquity. About one mile west is a ruin called Fenella's Castle, connected with which is a singular tradition concerning the murder of Kenneth III, by a powerful lady named Fenella, in revenge for the death of her son, who was slain by that monarch, in a rebellion. The parish of Fettercairn lies at the foot of the lower range of the Grampians, and extends considerably into the means: the ground on the west is light and sharp, with a small mixture of moss; on the east it becomes deeper of a fertile clay loam. Agriculture, within these few years, has made rapid progress in this district. Fairs are held on the 25th of May, or on the Saturday previous, if that day of the month should fall on a Monday, also on the 21st of November, subject to the same regulation.

JOHN'S-HAVEN, BENHOLME AND ST. CYRUS.

JOHN'S-HAVEN is a thriving sea-port village, in the parish of Benholme, 14 miles S. of Stonehaven, and 4 from Bervie, situate at the bottom of a hill between the coast road and the sea, and a little off the main thoroughfare, between Aberdeen and Montrose, 29 miles S. of the former, and 9 S. of the latter town. It contains an extensive manufactory for sail cloths, sackings, &c. which, with the weaving of linen cloths and fishing, employ the majority of the inhabitants. There is also a good brewery in the village, and in its vicinity several lime kilns. The parish of Benholme forms a square of nearly three miles, lying on the shore of the German ocean, bounded on the north by Bervie, and on the south by St. Cyrus. The land is level on the coast, and the interior consists of hill and dale: beneath the surface is deposited good freestone and limestone. The tower of Benholme, before the invention of gunpowder, was considered a strong place of defence. The places of worship are the parish kirk, and in the village a chapel for seceders.

St. CYRUS is a village in the parish of its name (sometimes called Ecclesraig) four miles from John's-Haven, situate between the coast and the road from Montrose, which passes through the district. The parish, which measures five miles in length, by three in breadth, lies partly on the sea shore, having Benholme on the east, Garcock on the north, Marykirk on the north-west, and the North Esk river washes part of its western boundary. The surface is pretty level, but intersected with several glens and rivulets, and is elevated in some places to little hills. More than three-fourths is arable. The Burn in Den Fenel forms a beautiful cascade, by falling over a rock 63 feet in height. The ancient residence of the Barclay family, known by the name of the Kane of Mathers, stands in ruins on a peninsulated rock, the base of which is washed by the sea. The castles of Morphy and Lauriston are also ancient buildings. The parish contains limestone quarries, and plenty of excellent freestone; and there is good salmon fishing in the Esk.

LAWRENCEKIRK AND MARYKIRK.

LAWRENCEKIRK (or Laurencekirk), the capital of the parish of its name, is a thriving and respectable village, 93 miles N. by E. of Edinburgh, and 10 N. of Montrose, situate on the main road from Perth to Aberdeen; and consists principally of one main street, at least a mile in length. This village, which was formerly but a mere hamlet, seated amidst an uncultivated tract of country, is indebted for the consequence it enjoys at the present day to Lord Gardenstone, a judge of the court of session, who, in the year 1772, took it under his fostering care and patronage. In 1779 he procured for the place the privileges of a burgh of barony, with the right of holding a weekly market: he also encouraged and contributed liberally to the introduction of a linen manufacture and bleach works; he established a good Inn; and to the same munificent individual has been ascribed the invention, upwards of fifty years ago, of the celebrated snuff-boxes, with wooden hinges. The linen and bleaching branches have disappeared, but the manufacture of snuff boxes, of the same kind as those made at Cumnock, Catrine and Mauchline, in Ayrshire, there described, is still continued with success, as is the inn, the 'Gardenstone Arms;' here is also a considerable brewery. The village is governed by a baillie and four councillors, who are chosen every three years, and regulate the police, &c. The parish, which is sometimes called Canneth, is four miles in length, and three at its greatest breadth; a ridge of hills stretches through its whole extent, from east to west, sloping gradually to the north and south; the small river Luther passes through the district, and numerous brooks intersect it. The name Lawrencekirk is derived from the old parish kirk, dedicated to St. Lawrence. Besides the established church, there is a large and neat episcopal chapel. Fairs are held on the third Wednesday in February (St. Anthony's fair) old style; and cattle fairs on the first Tuesday in April, old style, and the first Wednesday in November, new style.

The parish of MARYKIRK lies on the north bank of the North Esk, at the extremity of the Howe or Hollow of the Mearns, and is bounded by Garcock and St. Cyrus on the east, Lawrencekirk on the north, and Fettercairn on the west: it is four miles in length, by between three and four in breadth. The surface is level, and the soil, though various, is chiefly fertile; some fine plantations ornament the district, which is interspersed with a few handsome seats. The parish contains two villages, Luthermoor and Marykirk; the latter is situated on the road about half-way between Montrose and Lawrencekirk.

STONEHAVEN AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

STONEHAVEN (or STONEHIVE) is a sea-port, and the county town of the shire; 94 miles N. by E. of Edinburgh, 68 N. E. of Perth, 66 S. S. E. of Banff, 35 N. by E. of Arbroath, 23 N. of Montrose, 15 S. of Aberdeen, and 10 N. of Bervie; situate on the coast of the North Sea, at the mouth of the Carron stream, in the bottom of a bay, and flanked on both sides by lofty hills. The place, which is considerable, though not a royal burgh, is composed of an old and a new town: the former lies on the south bank of the Carron, adjacent to the harbour, in the parish of Dunnotar; the other on a peninsula or angle, formed by the Carron and the Cowie, in the parish of Fetteresso: the two towns are connected by a bridge, forming a continuation of the road from the south to Aberdeen. The new town is laid out on a regular plan, having broad streets, with a square in the centre; in this square stands a handsome market-house, erected in 1827, containing commodious shops; over these is a tavern, with a spacious hall for the accommodation of public meetings; also rooms occupied by the town dispensary. The harbour is a natural basin, sheltered on the south-east by a high rock which projects into the sea, and on the north-east by a quay that affords every facility for the loading or unloading of vessels. The shipping of the port is chiefly employed in the coal and lime trade, and occasionally in exporting grain to Leith. During the season a herring-fishery is carried on, to the great advantage of the place. Formerly a considerable manufacture of linen and cotton goods supplied employment to a number of weavers and their families, but for some years back this branch of industry has materially declined. There are two banking establishments here, namely, a branch of the 'Aberdeen Town and County Bank,' and a branch of the 'Bank of Scotland.' The 'Glentry Distillery' is upon a large scale, and at the bridge of Cowie is a considerable brewery. Stonehaven derives its principal support from the sheriff court of the county, which is held here every Wednesday and Friday; there is also a justice of peace court, for the recovery of small debts, on the first Monday of every month. Stonehaven is a burgh of barony, of which the jurisdiction is by charter vested in the magistrates, chosen by the superior and fenars. The established churches of Dunnotar and Fetteresso are situated near the town; there is also an episcopal chapel, and one each for seceders and methodists. The principal (indeed the only) object that can awaken interest in the vicinity of Stonehaven is Dunnotar Castle, about a mile and a half south of the town: it is situate on a perpendicular rock, one hundred and fifty feet above the level of the sea, about three acres in extent, and almost separated from the land by a deep chasm; the entrance is by a square tower of great strength, within high-water mark: it forms one of the most majestic ruins in Scotland; the skeleton of the structure still occupies one-half of the summit of the rock. This castle withstood a long siege by Cromwell's army, and its ultimate surrender was upon honourable terms; it was often used as a state prison, and several of the unconforming presbyterian clergy were compelled to be its inmates. It was built during the contest between Bruce and Baliol, by an ancestor of the Marischal family; and so great was its reputation for strength, that in 1651 it was selected for the depository of the regalia of Scotland, to secure them from capture by the English army. It was dismantled shortly after the civil war of 1715, when its proprietor, James Earl Marischal, was attainted for high treason: since that period (the direct line of succession having failed), the castle has become by purchase the property of the nearest heir male, Sir Alexander Keith, of Dunnotar and Ravelston, Knight Marischal of Scotland. Though dismantled, the stone-work of the fortress is yet pretty entire, there being in general nothing wanting except the roofs and the floors; the battlements, the formidable towers and airy turrets (full of loop-holes for the archer and musketeer), the hall for the banquet and the cell for the captive, are all alike entire, and their respective limits and divisions distinct.

A market is held here every Thursday, and from Martinmas to Candlemas (on Thursday) for cattle and grain; there are also five fairs, viz., on the Thursday before Christmas and the Thursday before Candlemas (old style), second Thursday in June, second Thursday in August, and first Thursday in November.

KINROSS-SHIRE.

THIS is a small inland county, situate on the western boundary of Fifeshire, from which it was severed in the year 1426; Fife also bounds it on the southern side, and Perthshire lies on its northern and on its western limits. At the revolution, Kinross being considered too small a county as it then stood, was enlarged by the addition of Orwell, Cleish, and Tulliebole, which parishes, before that period, formed a portion of Fifeshire. The general figure of the county is somewhat circular, although the line of its boundary is very irregular. It extends from east to west eleven miles, or rather more; and from north to south about nine miles and a half. The total superficies of the county amount to seventy-two square miles of land, and seven of lakes; of cultivated land about 27,700 acres, and of uncultivated about 18,400 acres.

SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—The boundaries or outskirts of the county are generally hilly; and the shire may be described as an open vale, or plain, environed by uplands and hills. The Ochil hills, which separate the district from Strathearn, are the northern boundary; the Lomond hills are the eastern, Benarty hill the south-eastern, and Cleish hills the south and south-western; these eminences are generally pastoral, and are adapted for the rearing of cattle; but they are likewise, in several places, suited to cultivation, and exhibit many pleasing and productive arable fields. The original condition of Ross resembled that of the contiguous county of Fife, having been of a moory, mossy nature. Up to a comparatively recent epoch, the lands were bleak and unreclaimed—a circumstance partly attributable to a certain local characteristic, namely: the district has the remarkable peculiarity in its proprietary of being much divided into farms, each owned in feu by its tenant; there are, in consequence, more resident lairds in proportion to its extent, in this part of the country, than are to be found in any other division of Scotland. The farms, it appears, were feued about the commencement of the eighteenth century, from the house of Kinross to the tenants then in possession, whose descendants inherit the properties, paying for them an exceedingly trifling duty or quit-rent. The marches of the various farms not having been accurately defined, and being more confused by the practice of ‘run-rig,’ it was long before the county manifested any very active signs of improvement. Within the recollection of persons of middle life, few districts were worse cultivated or less profitable than Kinross-shire; but the prime minister Pitt’s institution of rack-rent taxation, in conjunction with other circumstances (among which undoubtedly may be included the good example exhibited by neighbouring agriculturists), ultimately induced a spirited change; and now the progress of agriculture—the mode of draining, enclosing and planting—can compete with those of Fife, or most other districts: drainage, on an extensive and effectual system, has been carried into operation on the Carse east from Loch Leven, and on its margin; in all directions, in this particular quarter, productive arable fields present themselves, where, only a comparatively few years ago, nothing met the view but desolate moors and sombrous mosses. At this day many good roads intersect the shire, and various parts of it are sheltered by thriving comfort-inspiring plantations. The mineralogy of Kinross-shire is a subject of limited importance: although coal abounds in some localities, no works for raising it have yet been established; whinstone has been found in various parishes—so has sandstone, of the best quality; of limestone there is plenty, and it has been wrought profitably.

This county possesses no stream that can be entitled to rank as a river; the running waters are merely a few rivulets, most of which are tributary to Loch Leven. This beautiful and noble expanse of water (which we shall have to notice particularly under Kinross town) lies at the east end of a wide vale, and nearly in the centre of the county; the small river Leven issues from it, and pursues an easterly course through Fifeshire. Besides Loch Leven, there are a few minor lakes, or (as they are popularly termed) tarns, on the eminences above Cleish.

Kinross-shire is the smallest of the Scottish counties, except Clackmannan; and in population numbers the least, except Selkirk. It comprises only four complete parishes, and three parts of parishes; it possesses only one town, Kinross—with a large populous village in its neighbourhood, called Milnathort. The county, which has no parliamentary burgh, joins with Clackmannanshire in returning a member to the senate.

KINROSS, MILNATHORT AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KINROSS, a town of considerable antiquity, the capital of the preceding county and of the parish of its name, is 27 miles n. of Edinburgh, 19 s. w. of Cupar Fife, 17 s. of Perth, and 10 n. of Dunfermline; occupying a pleasant situation at the foot of the open vale of its name, on the north-western shore of Loch Leven. The town formerly consisted of a number of sinuous laues, composed of buildings of antique appearance, bordering on the lake; in recent times it has undergone many extensive improvements in the erection of handsome new houses, particularly in the main street, through which is the road to the north. In this street are the principal inns and shops. Originally the vicinity of Kinross was dignified by a castle of great strength, situated on a promontory jutting into the lake, and of which the town was a dependence. This ancient strong hold, long the residence of the Earls of Morton, was removed upwards of a century ago, and the promontory is now occupied by Kinross House, a beautiful structure, designed and built by Sir William Bruce, the architect of the modern part of Holyrood House, and many other mansions, in the style of the time of Charles II. The environs of the town derive much of their beauty from the pleasure grounds and exuberant plantations around this edifice, which stands near the northern entrance to the town, and opposite to the island and castle of Queen Mary, on Loch Leven. This noble sheet of water is ten miles in circumference, and contains four islands; the largest of which occupies about forty-eight English acres—upon this latter stood the ancient priory of St. Serf (or St. Servanus), of which only a fragment now remains. On another stand the ruins of the Castle of Loch Leven, once the seat of the Douglasses, and in recent times rendered celebrated by Sir Walter Scott, as the scene in his novel of the 'Abbot.' Here the unfortunate Queen Mary was confined; and a bunch of keys, supposed to be those which the Queen threw into the loch, when she escaped, was found a few years ago, and deposited in the antiquarian museum, in Edinburgh. The place where the Queen landed, upon her escape from this island castle, on May 2nd, 1563, was on the south side of the lake, and is still pointed out by the inhabitants to the numerous visitors who frequent this place in the summer time. There is a fine walk by the side of the water, which is much resorted to in fine weather. The loch is well stored with trout of a red colour, and particularly fine quality, eels, perch, pike, &c.

The principal trade of Kinross consists in the manufacture of cotton goods, which is chiefly carried on by agents, located here, for houses in Glasgow. Of the other branches of business, tanning and brewing may be mentioned as the principal. As the capital of the county the courts of the sheriff sit here during the session, and justice of peace courts are held monthly, for determining causes under the small debt act. The parish church, which stands near the centre of the town, is a plain edifice, with a steeple. The only other place of worship is a chapel for an united secession congregation. Fairs are held on the third Wednesday in March, the first of June, the third Wednesday in July, and the 18th of October.

MILNATHORT, popularly designated Mills o' Forth, is a considerable village in the parish of Orwell, one mile north-east of Kinross: it is neatly built, and is one of the most thriving and industrious villages within an extensive circuit. The inhabitants are chiefly engaged in weaving for the Glasgow manufacturers, who have here, as at Kinross, resident agents. The greater part of Orwell parish is fine arable land, well enclosed and planted, rising from the low shore of Loch Leven and the vale of Kinross, towards the north, in which direction it is hilly. On the low ground, towards the lake, stands the ancient ruined castle of Burleigh, formerly the residence of the Lords Burleigh. There are three annual fairs held here, namely, on the first Wednesday in April, old style; on the 9th July and the 5th November.

KIRKCUDBRIGHTSHIRE,

COMMONLY called a STEWARTRY, but in reality and to all intents and purposes a sheriffdom or shire, lies in the south of Scotland, and forms the eastern and by far the most extensive portion of the ancient district of Galloway. It is bounded by Dumfries-shire on the east and north-east, on the south by the Solway Frith and the Irish Sea, by the county of Ayr on the north and north-west, and by Wigtonshire (or Western Galloway) on the west. In extent it measures, from south-east to north-west, about forty-four miles, by a breadth varying from twenty to thirty miles, the narrowest part being towards its north-western limits: it comprises a superficies of 855 square miles, or 547,200 statute acres, including twelve square miles of lakes: about one-third of the whole surface may be said to be brought into cultivation. It appears that the denomination of 'stewartry' originated at the period when, by the forfeiture of the possessions of the Baliols, the Cummins, and their various vassals, this district became the property of the crown, when it is understood to have been first put under the authority of a royal STEWARD; in subsequent times the office of steward, in the appointment of the king, was one of much honour, and was often the subject of contest. For a considerable lapse of time, however, after the establishment of a separate stewardship, the district was still in some measure esteemed to be politically attached to Dumfries-shire, but this nominal connexion was formally dissolved before the civil wars in the reign of Charles I. From the force of ancient usage, the appellation of steward, instead of that of sheriff, has, down to the present day, been popularly continued, although by the civil arrangements of modern times there is not the least difference in the two offices.

SOIL, PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, &c.—The soil of the county is principally composed of a thin mould, or a brownish loam mixed with sand—and is incumbent sometimes on gravel, and in many places on rock; the whole surface is interspersed with meadows, and mingled with moss. The shire has no statistical subdivisions, except that four of the most northerly parishes—Carsphairn, Dalry, Kells, and Balmaclellan—are commonly designated the district of 'Glenkins.' The aspect of the country, however, forms a very natural distinction into two divisions: if a line be drawn from the centre of Kirkpatrick-Iron-Gray parish to the Gatehouse of Fleet, all to the north-west, with little exception, is so mountainous, that it may with propriety be termed a Highland district; while the south and east parts exhibit a fine champagne and cultivated country—a contrast strikingly obvious. Anciently the greater proportion of the land was covered with a forest, which is now eradicated, or to be traced only in trifling remnants on the banks of the streams. It appears that, so early as the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, this hilly territory was under a productive process of agriculture, originated and improved by the assiduity of the monks of the different abbeys in the district; and it is upon record that in the memorable year 1300, when Edward I subdued Galloway, he caused considerable quantities of wheat to be exported from the harbour of Kirkcudbright to Cumberland, and even to Dublin, to be manufactured into flour, in which state it was brought back to victual the various strong holds and castles held by that monarch. In these times the staple products were wheat and oats—the culture of barley, pease and beans being very limited. This age of agricultural prosperity was succeeded by destructive intestine wars, fanaticism, improvidence, and consequent misery, which lasted four hundred years, and reduced the country to a desert. It was not until the beginning of the eighteenth century that any measures were adopted to effect a resuscitation of its agricultural capabilities, which for so long a period had lain dormant. The inclosure of the lands with fences was the first attempt at a series of improvements; but this judicious preliminary was encountered by a riotous opposition from the rural population, who rose in considerable numbers, under the title of 'levellers,' and proceeded to demolish the newly-formed boundaries, under the influence of some extravagantly wild notions as to a natural general right in property; and they were not subdued until the most energetic measures were employed for that purpose: this mischievous result of ignorance having been overcome, however, and the 'levelling' delusion dissipated, the county steadily advanced in an accelerated progress of improvement; and towards the close of the same century the district could compete with Dumfries and other adjacent shires in agricultural prosperity. Planting has been introduced by several noblemen and gentlemen of the stewartry, and much has been accomplished in reclaiming moss-lands. The number of horses, cattle and sheep reared in the county is sufficiently large to evince the possession of much practical knowledge, and consequent success, in this branch of productive economy; and the breed of swine has increased to a prodigious extent, these animals being now a staple commodity both for home consumption and exportation. The district is very nearly destitute of coal, which, as well as the greater part of the lime used, is brought from Cumberland; and there is very little freestone. Marl is found in great plenty, especially in the loch of Carlinwark, which contains an inexhaustible store of the best shell-marl; ironstone and lead ore also abound, but the deficiency of coal presents an obstruction to either being made available for the smelting process. Besides the salmon fishings at the mouths of the rivers, the Solway Frith affords every opportunity for the capture of the inhabitants of the deep. The manufacture of linen, woollen and cotton goods engages a considerable number of hands in the towns and villages.

RIVERS, &c.—Like other mountainous countries, this is intersected by numerous streams, which, uniting, form four considerable rivers; these are—the DEE, the KEN, the CREE, and the URR. The Ken is considered the largest, receiving in its course numerous rivulets which drain the neighbouring hills, and even affording an asylum to the waters of the Dee, although the latter assumes the appellative privilege after entering the Ken. All these rivers rise in the north, and empty themselves into the Solway Frith or the Irish Sea. The smaller streams are the Fleet, the Tarf, the Deogh, and the Cluden. The Solway Frith, in a circular form, washes the coast of the stewartry from the Nith to the Cree, a space of forty-five miles; and along the shore of this beneficial estuary the coast is bold and rocky, the cliffs in some instances rising to a great height.

The shire, or stewartry, comprises twenty-eight parishes, and contains two royal burghs—KIRKCUDBRIGHT and NEW GALLOWAY; the latter, in conjunction with Wigtown, Stranraer and Whithorn (in Wigtownshire), sends a member to parliament; and the STEWARTRY, like the other counties of Scotland, returns another representative to the senate. The principal eminences in this district, above the level of the sea, are—Criffel (or Crawfell), 1,831 feet; Cairnsmuir, 1,728; Bencairn, 1,200; and Cairnharro, 1,100.

AUCHENCAIRN, AND DUNDRENNAN IN RERWICK.

AUCHENCAIRN, the principal village in the parish of Rerwick (or Rerrick), is 8 miles s. of Castle Douglas, 14 E. of Kirkcudbright, and 22 s. w. of Dumfries; situate on the main road between the two last named towns. The inhabitants are principally employed in frame-work knitting. In the mouth of Auchencairn bay lies the small island of Heston, which stands high out of the water, and affords excellent pasture for sheep. A fair is held on the 16th of August.

DUNDRENNAN is a small village in the same parish as Auchencairn, four miles from that village, deriving its chief, indeed only importance from having in its vicinity the ruined abbey of Dundrennan, the greatest attraction in this part of the country. This abbey, the venerable remains of which stand about a mile and a half from the sea, was founded by Fergus, Lord of Galloway, in the year 1142. The church was built, as usual, in the form of a cross, with the spire rising two hundred feet from the centre. The body was one hundred and twenty feet in length; and on the south side of the church were the cloisters, with a grass-plot in the centre. From what remains of the edifice, the whole must have been built in a style of great taste and architectural beauty. The buildings are now greatly dilapidated, and are almost entirely covered with a pale gray-coloured moss, which gives a character of peculiar and almost airy lightness to the lofty columns and gothic arches, many of which are entire. This sacred edifice afforded a temporary shelter to Mary Stuart during the last hours she spent in Scotland. Tradition has traced with accuracy her course from Langside to the scene of her embarkation for England. She arrived at this spot in the evening, and spent her last night within the walls of the monastery, then a magnificent and extensive building. The spot where she took boat next morning for the English side of the Solway is at the nearest point of the coast; the road from the religious establishment thither runs through a secluded valley of surpassing beauty, and leads directly to the shore, where the rock is still pointed out by the peasantry from which the hapless queen embarked on her death-destined voyage; it is situated in a little creek, surrounded by vast and precipitous rocks, and called 'Port Mary,' in commemoration of the unfortunate monarch's departure from it. The scene is analogously wild and sublime; and besides being inappreciable of melancholy associations in the mind of the poet or romantic tourist, the coast here and in the neighbourhood merits the attention of the painter and the investigation of the mineralogist.

CASTLE DOUGLAS,

WITH THE VILLAGE OF KELTON-HILL, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CASTLE DOUGLAS is a modern, neat, thriving town and burgh of barony, in the parish of Kelton; 90 miles s. s. w. of Edinburgh, 18 w. by s. of Dumfries, 15 N. E. of Gatchhouse, and 10 N. N. E. of Kirkcudbright; situate on the road between the two latter towns, and on that from Portpatrick to Carlisle, in a pleasant fertile district, on the banks of the Carlinwark water, from which lake the original name of the place was derived. In 1792 it was erected by the proprietor into a burgh of barony by its present appellation, and its government vested in a provost, two bailies, and seven councillors. Fifty or sixty years ago it was composed of but a few detached houses; it has now upwards of four hundred and fifty respectable dwellings, laid out in regular streets, the principal one lining the public road. In the town-house, which is a modern commodious edifice, with a good clock, a court is held on the first Monday monthly for the recovery of debts under £5. There are three principal inns, and several others of a respectable character, but less elevated pretensions; among the latter is a comfortable tavern, called the 'Threave Castle,' the occupier of which, Mr. Saml. Murphy, is in possession of the chair in which Mary Queen of Scots sat at dinner previous to her embarking at Port Mary, as noticed under the head of the foregoing parish. There are established in this town three banking houses—one a native firm, and two branches; three or four tanneries, a brewery, and a number of handsome shops—those particularly in King-street, for the sale of drapery goods, are furnished with extensive stocks of fashionable articles in that line of business. Altogether Castle Douglas may be considered one of the most respectable and prosperous little towns, although not of remote origin, in the south of Scotland.

On the south-west side of the town are the ruins of the ancient Castle of Threave; and on its south-eastern quarter stands the modern and elegant mansion of Gelston Castle (formerly called Douglas Castle), now the residence of William Maitland, Esq. Carlinwark lake, before mentioned, is upwards of a mile in length, and occupies one hundred and eighteen acres; before it was partially drained, however, by the canal cut from it to the river Dee, its area was much greater. It contains a number of small islands, one of which, in the middle of the lake, has been bound round its base with huge frames of oak; but whether the island has been artificially formed upon them, as some think, or they have been placed there with intent to support some vast superstructure, cannot now be decided. The lake is plentifully stored with pike and perch, and at its bottom is an inexhaustible treasure of the best shell marl. Castle Douglas and its vicinity appear to have been the arena of much contest during the feudal system, when the ancient Douglasses dwelt in the castle of Threave and were lords of this district; for on the west side of the town are still visible encampments and breastworks, evidently thrown up against the castle; and on the south-west bank of the lake is a spot still termed the 'gallows lot' or 'plot,' said to have been the place of execution in former times. The market, which is very considerable for grain in winter and cattle in summer, is held on Monday; the grain, which is sold by sample, is principally exported to England and the north of Scotland. Fairs are held on the 11th February, or the following Monday, for horses; on the last Monday in March, for hiring servants; on the 23d September, or following Monday, for the latter purposes and also for horses; and on the 13th November, or the following Monday, for horses.

KELTON-HILL (or Roanhouse) is a small village, in the same parish as Castle Douglas, about two miles and a half from that town. It was once noted for its extensive horse-fairs, now (with the exception of one) transferred to Castle Douglas—an alteration of considerable advantage to that town, but of a very contrary result to this place. The fair it still retains is held on the 17th June, old style, or following Tuesday; and is a large one for horses, and for hiring harvest servants.

CREETOWN

Is a small town and burgh of barony, in the parish of Kirkmabreck, 117 miles s. w. of Edinburgh, twelve w. of Gatehouse, about seven s. e. of Newton-Stewart, and three from Wigton, across the ferry. It was formerly called Ferry Town of Cree, and derived that appellation, doubtless, from its situation—the town being seated on the east side of the creek of the river Cree, at the head of Wigton bay, and opposite the peninsula, on which stands the town of Wigton. It is a place of but trifling commercial consequence, the only trade it possesses being almost confinned to the importation of coal and lime, and the exportation of grain and granite; the latter, of which there is a fine quarry in the vicinity, is wrought by the trustees of the Liverpool docks. The mail road from Portpatrick to Dumfries passes through the town, which circumstance conduces, in some degree, to its importance. This place is the property of John M'ulloch, Esq. whose mansion is a great ornament to it; and there are some few other handsome residences in the neighbourhood. The church, which is a modern edifice, having been erected in 1834, is a neat building.

CROSSMICHAEL AND PARTON.

CROSSMICHAEL is a small village in the parish of its name, 91 miles s.s.w. of Edinburgh, 19 s.w. of Dumfries, and 9 s.s.e. of New Galloway, pleasantly situate on the banks of the Dee, which river is crossed, about a mile and a half from the village, by an elegant stone bridge, over which the high road passes leading to Lawrieston and Castle Douglas; Crossmichael being distant five miles from the former, and three and a half from the latter town. In the village is the parish church, the patron saint of which, prior to the reformation, was Saint Michael, and hence the name, though of the cross there are neither remains or traditions preserved. The parish lies nearly in the centre of the Stewartry, having the Urr water on the east, and the Dee or Loch Ken on the west. Two small lakes which have an outlet to the Dee water furnish good perch and pike fishing.

PARTON parish lies along the banks of the Dee, that water and the Urr being its western boundary; it extends from six to seven miles in length, its breadth varying from four to six. A large portion of the parish is hilly, heathy, and pastoral, especially in the northern quarter—towards the Dee the land is flat and arable, and under cultivation. What may be called the village, which contains but a few houses, the church (a neat building erected in 1834), and the manse, is about three miles from Crossmichael. The manse occupies a very pleasant situation fronting the river, and is surrounded by hills and wood. In the vicinity is an excellent slate quarry.

DALBEATTIE AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

DALBEATTIE, the principal village in the parish of Urr, is 87 miles s. s. w. of Edinburgh, 13½ n. by E. of Kirkcudbright, the like distance s. w. of Dumfries, and 6 from Castle Douglas; most eligibly situate on the Dalbeattie burn, a rivulet which falls into the water of Urr; which latter is here navigable for vessels of seventy or eighty tons. This harbour, which is called Dub-o'-Hass, is about five miles from the Solway Firth. The village possesses great advantages, in respect to situation, for a maritime trade, having a communication by sea with the western ports, and it possesses some large falls of water, capable of turning any kind of machinery, so that it requires nothing but some spirited individuals to render it one of the most improved places in the south of Scotland. The mills now in operation are a paper, a flax, a corn and a wauk mill, and two for sawing timber, the whole propelled by water; there is also an extensive smithy, the hammers of which are also worked by the same power. In the village are places of worship for presbyterians and Roman catholics, and a comfortable inn. Within the parish, and situate on the banks of the river, about a mile below Urr church, is the celebrated Note of Urr, an artificial mount rising from the centre of elevated circles, and used in primitive times as a seat for courts of judicature by the petty chiefs of this district of Galloway. The surface of the country around here is pretty level, and the soil is light.

GATEHOUSE-OF-FLEET

It is a neat modern town partly in the parish of Anwoth, but chiefly in that of Girthorn, 105 miles s. s. w. of Edinburgh, 50 E. of Portpatrick, 33 s. w. of Dumfries, and 7 w. of Kirkcudbright, lying chiefly on the east bank of the Fleet, at the entrance of that river into Fleet Bay. On account of the favourableness of the situation, and the moderate feu duties, Gatehouse has, in less than half a century, risen from a single inn, or stage house, to a manufacturing town of considerable note. It is well built, regular, and clean, the houses being generally of the same height, the streets running in straight lines, and crossing each other at right angles. A good stone bridge crosses the Fleet, connecting the principal part of the town with that in Anwoth parish. The situation of Gatehouse is truly beautiful, being seated in a romantic, fertile vale, embosomed in hills and mountains, which form a spacious and delightful amphitheatre. Some of the hills having their summits crowned, and their sides covered with hanging woods, interspersed with rich pasture; while the higher and more distant mountains, point their naked blue heads to the sky, and exhibit all the rude grandeur and naked wildness of uncultivated nature. This amphitheatre expands with a wide opening towards the south, and exposes full to the view a fine bay of the sea, which runs so far into the land as to appear from Gatehouse, like a large lake. At the foot of the town rolls the pure stream of the Fleet, which here meets the tide, and becomes navigable for vessels of sixty tons burden; and the navigation of the river has been considerably improved, at the sole expense of the proprietor, Mr. Murray, who, at a cost of 3000*l.* cut a canal in a straight line, from which vessels trading to the port have already derived incalculable advantage.

KIRKCUDBRIGHT, TWYNHOLME & NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KIRKCUDBRIGHT is a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, and capital of the stewartry and parish of its name; 100 miles s. s.w. of Edinburgh, 55 E. of Portpatrick, and 28 s.w. of Dumfries; occupying a peninsular situation on the east or left side of the Dee, about six miles from the confluence of that river with the Solway Frith. Kirkcudbright is a town of considerable antiquity, but of its origin there is no authentic or even traditinary record; it is merely a matter of conjecture that it is as old as the church of St. Cuthbert, which was erected as early as the eighth century. The establishment of St. Cuthbert's church was followed by the construction of a small fort by the lords of Galloway, which in after-times was superseded by a castle in the proprietary of the crown, by whose authority the place was put under the government of a constable. During the domination of the Douglasses in Galloway, Kirkcudbright became a burgh of regality under their influence: on their forfeiture, James II erected the town into a royal burgh, by charter dated at Perth, 26th October, 1455; this grant was renewed and confirmed by Charles I, on the 20th July, 1633; and the burgh has since been under the government of a provost, two bailies, and thirteen councillors, with a treasurer and chamberlain; it joins with Dumfries, Annan, Sanquhar and Lochmaben in returning a member to parliament. The revenue of the corporation is considerably increased by the salmon fishings in the Dee; and the town derives a certain degree of consequence and advantage from being the seat of the stewartry courts.

Kirkcudbright, which has been materially improved within the last forty years, at the present day presents an aspect remarkably pleasing: within, it is regular, clean and neat; and externally it appears embosomed in the beautiful foliage of a fine sylvan country. It is composed of six or seven distinct streets, built at right angles with each other, and well paved; the houses, which are for the most part two stories high, have a respectable and comfortable appearance, and at once bespeak the taste and easy circumstances of the inhabitants. The stewartry buildings and gaol, erected in 1816, exhibit a highly imposing appearance; and from one of the lofty towers which surmount the latter an extensive view may be obtained of the beautiful environs of the town, including the ruins of the ancient castle of Kirkcudbright, built in 1582, by M'Clellan, ancestor of the present Lord Kirkcudbright. The former gaol and court-house is a very curious old edifice (with the market cross stuck up against it), supposed to have been erected about the middle of the sixteenth century. The burgh possesses but little trade besides that which is the offspring of its own resources, and dependent upon its own consumption, essentially promoted by its resort as the county town and the residence of many opulent families. The manufacture of cotton goods and hosiery exists here to a limited extent, and the shops and inns are of the most respectable order; of the latter there are four of a superior grade, two in St. Cuthbert-street, and the other two in High-street; the 'Commercial Inn' is the principal posting house. The harbour is the best in the stewartry; at ordinary spring-tides the depth of water is thirty feet, and at the lowest neap-tides eighteen feet: it is well calculated for commercial purposes, but the place has no organized communication with any of the manufacturing districts. The river is navigable for two miles above the town, to the bridge of Tongland, which is constructed of one arch of one hundred and ten feet span, and picturesquely blends with the surrounding landscape. As yet there is no bridge across the Dee at Kirkcudbright, and passengers and carriages have to be ferried over in a flat-bottomed boat, or sort of floating bridge of peculiar formation; in stormy weather, however, or when there is an excessive current, this mode of conveyance is not without danger; and the construction of a drawbridge, to admit of vessels passing through, would be esteemed a great improvement as well as advantage to the district. There is a regular communication kept up between this place and Liverpool, by means of a steam-vessel, at least once a week.

The established church, an old building, stands near the harbour, on the site of the Franciscan monastery, founded in the twelfth century; a new church is now in progress of erection: in High-street is a neat chapel belonging to the united associate congregation. The Kirkcudbright academy, or grammar-school, is a large and elegant edifice, comprising a spacious room for a public subscription library: there are likewise in the town news and billiard rooms, and a free-masons' lodge. The environs of Kirkcudbright are most delightful: the rising grounds on each side of the river, from Tongland to the sea, are embellished with thriving plantations; and the general prospect, both marine and inland, is truly lovely. St. Mary's Isle, a beautiful spot, the seat of the Earl of Selkirk, is about a mile from the town. The burgh is amply supplied with all domestic necessaries, and provisions are comparatively cheap. The market day is Friday, and there are two annual fairs, namely, on the 12th of August or following Friday, and the 29th September or Friday after.

The small village of TWYNHOLME, in the parish of its name, is situate three miles from Kirkcudbright, on the main road from Gatehouse to Castle Douglas. The soil is fertile, and the surface of the district rises into many small hills, partly arable. Of the extensive woods with which this part of Galloway was formerly covered, the only remains now existing are around the old castle of Campstone, a building pleasantly situated on an eminence nigh the junction of the rivers Dee and Tarf. The village contains a small neat parish kirk; and at a short distance from it is Barwhinnock, the seat and estate of P. L. M'Millan, Esq.
